INFORMATION FOR DELEGATES

BEFORE STARTING—

1. If a clergyman, secure your clergy certificate well before starting date. The Special Railroad folder will give additional items of information as to rates, dates, etc.
2. If not entitled to clergy rates—secure your Delegate's certificate, which entitles you to reduced rate on the railroads. These can be had on application to the office of the National Council by Delegates attending, corresponding and honorary members.
3. Notify the Local Committee (Rev. Chester B. Emerson, North Congregational Church, Detroit, Mich.) when you expect to arrive and how long you will stay. If you wish to secure your own accommodations at a hotel, make your reservation before May 15.
4. Have your mail sent in care of the National Council, North Woodward Ave. Congregational Club, Detroit, Mich.

WHEN YOU REACH DETROIT—

1. Report to the office of the Council in the North Congregational Church. There you will find any mail that has been forwarded to you. You can secure official badge, program and general information.
2. The Local Committee will have an office in the Chapel and this committee will be prepared to help all visitors to find suitable lodging places. Official delegates will be entertained by the people of the city, when application has been made to the local committee well in advance.
3. There will be a number of special features which will be announced during the meeting: college reunions, state meetings, commission and committee meetings. These events will be announced publicly and by mail. Hence, even if you have directed your mail to a hotel or private home, be sure to ask for mail at the "Council Post Office."
4. Tickets for the banquets, etc., will be on sale at the Chapel.
5. Do not fail to visit some of the many points of interest in and around Detroit—arrangements for sight-seeing will be announced from time to time.
6. Sunday in the churches of the city will be a great day. Eminent preachers will be in all the pulpits and sermons suitable to the day will be preached. Special music will be provided. Special Sunday evening Services will be conducted in many churches.
7. The Exhibit in the Dining Room will be worthy of careful study.
8. Dr. Reed and his assistants will maintain an office in the Exhibition Room for the purpose of meeting ministers and laymen interested in the Annuity Fund.
9. The Nominating Committee and the Business Committee will each have an office. The place will be announced on the Bulletin and persons having occasion to bring matters before these Committees should arrange with the chairman for hearing well in advance.
10. Dr. Burton will have an office in the West Balcony room and when not engaged with the business sessions of the Council, he will be glad to meet the ministers and laymen who desire to see him.
11. The office of the Council will be established in the church office just across the corridor from the auditorium, the Scribes, Assistant Secretary and Associate Secretary, when not engaged in the meetings will generally be found there.

ON THE WAY TO AND FROM DETROIT—

Those going from the East plan to visit Niagara and Cleveland, and those from the West, St. Louis and Chicago, on the way. Post Council Trips are outlined on the railroad folder—other interesting tours are available. Information can be secured from the National Council office or the Railroads.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

The Executive Committee would preface its report by mentioning the death during the biennium of its first Chairman, the Rev. Charles F. Carter, D.D., and of his immediate successor in office, the Honorable John H. Perry. Wise counsellors and faithful men, each one during his long life rendered a notable service to our fellowship of Congregational churches. The Committee has caused to be inscribed in its minutes suitable tributes to their memory.

Meetings

Caring for the entertainment of the Congregational Pilgrimage from Great Britain called for an unusual number of meetings of the Committee. Since the Council in Omaha there have been twelve meetings, and an additional meeting will be held before the Council in Detroit. The average attendance at these twelve meetings has been ten out of a possible fourteen.

The World Conference on Faith and Order

In its report made to the Council at Omaha mention was made of arrangements being made to participate in the World Conference on Faith and Order to be held in Geneva in August 1927. Our churches were represented in that Conference by the following accredited delegates: Drs. William E. Barton, S. Parkes Cadman, Henry A. Atkinson, Lewis T. Reed, William Horace Day, Chester B. Emerson, Morris H. Turk, Edward M. Noyes, Herman F. Swartz; Revs. Robert A. Hume, John J. Banninga, Timothy Lew; Mr. Raymond H. Fiero, Mrs. Albert J. Lyman and Prof. Eliza H. Kendrick. Others present were Prof. John Nollen, Dr. W. W. Peet; Revs. Roy M. Houghton, Thomas J. Jones, Arthur W. Dyeer; Dr. Samuel H. Baer and Miss Margaret Slattery.

Dr. William E. Barton, as chairman of the delegation, made report to the Executive Committee, indicating that while the Conference was in the main harmonious and fraternal, no notable advance was achieved toward the organic unification of the Christian churches of the world.

The Year Book

A new schedule for the Year Book has been adopted, reducing the tabulation from a two-page to a one-page system. The result is before the Council in the book for 1927, much reduced in size, and it is hoped, more convenient for purposes of reference. Incidentally there is a saving of over three thousand dollars in expense.

Conditional Gifts

The Committee has approved of the new rates on Conditional Gifts adopted by the Commission on Missions. Apparently the more liberal terms offered to the people of our churches has resulted in an increased volume of such donations.

The Commission on Evangelism and the Devotional Life

In its last report the Committee mentioned a prospective bequest to the National Council designated for the use of the Commission on Evangelism and the Devotional Life. This bequest from the estate of the late Henry S. Chapman of Glen Ridge, New Jersey, has been received in the sum of forty-three thousand dollars, and is now held by the Corporation for the National Council. The Committee has directed that the income of this fund be designated for financing the Commission's Program of Worship. The Commission under the leadership of its Secretary, Dr. Fagley, has been preparing material for the guidance and aid of pastors, and holding conferences with ministers in all parts of the country. These efforts are meeting with an eager response, and there is every reason to believe that they will be most helpful in developing a devotional spirit and a reverent worship in our churches.

The Commission on Men's Work

The Commission on Men's Work has reported, recommending that this temporary commission be discontinued and its work distributed through agencies already existing. The Executive Committee concurs in this recommendation and presents it to the National Council for action.

Group Insurance

A plan of group insurance for employees of the National Council has been prepared by a committee appointed for the purpose, and has been adopted by the Executive Committee.

Polity

A sub-committee on polity made a report on certain questions submitted to it by an association, which is approved by the Executive Committee, and is hereby presented to the Council for its action:

1. May an acting pastor of a Congregational church, himself not a Congregationalist, sit in a vicinage council of Congregational churches?

In the judgment of your Committee such a minister, serving as de facto pastor of an invited church and sent by that church to a council in which it has been invited to be represented by its minister and a delegate, has a right to a seat in the council. If the inviting church does not desire such a minister to be a member of the Council, its remedy is to omit the church which he is serving as acting pastor from its list of invited churches, and if, in an extreme case a majority of the invited churches agree that such a minister should not be a member of the proposed council, their remedy is to decline to send delegates, and thus to prevent the council. But there are abundant precedents for the sitting of non-Congregational ministers in such councils.

2. May a minister hold his standing both in a Congregational Association and in some other ecclesiastical body?

The National Council in 1898 answered this question in the negative, a serious question having at that time arisen with regard to a particular and notorious case. But within the period of thirty years which has elapsed since that action the movement for federated churches has risen and has caused the question to rise again and from another direction. A number of cases have occurred in which ministers have secured such double standing. Your Committee is of the opinion that such double standing is still irregular, and that in case of discipline it might result in confusion. A minister might be expelled from one ecclesiastical body and still be in good standing in another. This, however, might not be so serious as would at first appear, as the body that expelled him would have no further responsibility for him, and the other body would be at liberty to retain him so long as he appeared to his fellow members in that body to be making his calling and election sure, and they also could discipline him if and when he seemed to them to merit discipline. In the present flux of usage growing out of our federated churches and our movements toward closer integration, your committee would not recommend any drastic action; but in the interest of good order we suggest that a minister ought to be responsible to one and only one ecclesiastical body and that an affiliated relation with a corresponding body of another denomination would be more nearly regular than a divided allegiance, and a divided disciplinary responsibility. We therefore advise that the Executive Committee recommend to the Council that it in turn recommend to conferences and associations the affiliated relation when a second standing is desired.

3. Should there be a limit to the size of associations?

While the National Council has no authority to determine the size of associations, it has a right to determine its own membership, and the distribution of its money for the payment of expenses of delegates to the meeting of the National Council. Your Committee therefore suggests that the Executive Committee propose an amendment to Article III of the Constitution to the effect that associations of six or more churches shall be entitled to elect delegates, as was provided in the original Constitution.

The British Pilgrimage

At the Council in Omaha it was announced that our Congregational brethren in Great Britain were planning a pilgrimage of goodwill to the United States, and the Council took action expressing its cordial welcome to the prospective visitors, and directed the Executive Committee to make suitable arrangements for entertaining our guests. The Executive Committee itself served as the General Committee, with local committees in Boston and New York. The Pilgrims contributed the sum of thirteen thousand dollars toward the expense of their own entertainment in America. This together with the moneys raised by the committee met all expenses, including a part of the expense of the Executive Committee. (See Treasurer's report.) The Committee appointed its Chairman and Secretary Fagley to go to England and escort the Pilgrims to our shores. The White Star Line generously provided passage, and they were the guests of the Pilgrims on the return voyage. Nothing could exceed the courtesy and hospitality extended to your representatives both in England and on the ocean voyage. The ship Celtic was filled to capacity with over twelve hundred British Congregationalists. They visited Boston, Plymouth and New York, while a special delegation of one hundred went to Washington. The appointments made by the local committees were perfect. In New York our guests were entertained for the most part in hotels. In Boston, by an amazing piece of machinery extemporized for the occasion, they were distributed in over seven hundred homes in forty-six towns. The fraternizing of these British brethren with our people was a delightful experience for all who participated in it. So far as reported nothing occurred to mar the memory of this fellowship. The day spent at Plymouth, where the pastor of the Church of the Pilgrimage, the Rev. Theodore E. Busfield, gave invaluable aid to the Committee, was most impressive. The final event of the Pilgrimage, the dinner at the Hotel Astor in New York, where two thousand British and Americans met in friendly intercourse, will not be forgotten by those whose privilege it was to be present. The expressions of appreciation on the part of our guests, both verbal and written in letters since their return home, are most cordial. The Pilgrimage as a gesture of friendship between Congregationalists of the two English-speaking peoples, was a success even beyond the anticipations of those who planned it. We know better than we did, on both sides of the sea, that however we may be divided by political frontiers, we are one in Christ Jesus.

The International Council of 1930

The decennial International Council of Congregational Churches is to be held in Bournemouth, England, the first week in July, 1930. The Executive Committee has authorized the American members of the Interim Committee to organize as the American Interim Committee, and correspond with the British Interim Committee in making arrangements for the Council, and to nominate to the Executive Committee for submission to the National Council a list of delegates in the proportion of five ministers, three laymen and two women.

In connection with this International Council our British brethren have invited us to return their visit of friendship with an American Pilgrimage. The acceptance of this invitation is advised by the Executive Committee, and terms of transportation have been obtained from the steamship companies.

Miscellaneous

The Executive Committee has placed on record its sense of appreciation of the large service of Moderator Davis, whose travels on behalf of the Council reached over 40,000 miles in a single year.

In connection with the visit of the Moderator to the Hawaiian Islands the Committee expressed its judgment that it would be well for each Moderator to make one trip to the Islands during his term.

The Executive Committee have made numerous appointments, filling vacancies on various committees, commissions, etc., as the list appears complete in the Grey Book.

The Committee has noted an error in Article III, 1. (a) of the Constitution, which is made to be self-contradictory by providing for two delegates from each State Conference in one line and one delegate in another. For the guidance of the Committee on Credentials the Executive Committee has interpreted this as a clerical error and has requested a State Conference to propose a definite amendment to correct this mistake.

The Executive Committee also calls attention to the fact that under the same Article it is possible for an association of only two churches to be entitled to a delegate to the National Council and to share in the mileage provisions. The Committee believes that this is inequitable and that very small associations should be content with their representation through their State Conferences, and presents a recommendation to this effect.

The Committee has joined with the Commission on Missions in maintaining a department of publicity for the denomination, through which department widespread information regarding activities in various lines has been secured.

The Committee has met from time to time with the Chairmen of the Commissions, has cooperated with these Commissions in their activities and attended to a multitude of denominational affairs, which do not appear to call for enumeration.

Council Program

The Executive Committee is charged with the duty of preparing the program for the Council. The Committee appointed a sub-committee from its own membership, consisting of the Chairman of the Executive Committee, the Secretary of the National Council, Mrs. Ernest A. Evans, Mrs. D. C. Turner and Mr. Charles H. Seaver, and under the lead of this committee a program has been prepared and is herewith presented.

Recommendations

The Executive Committee makes the following recommendations:

1. That the Council itself hear invitations from the floor for the entertainment of the next meeting of the Council but refer final decision to the Executive Committee.
2. That the state conferences be requested to contribute to the Council seven cents per capita on total membership and to the travel fund one cent per capita.
3. That the following persons be elected corresponding members for the current meeting: State Superintendents who are not delegates; Rev. Frederick L. Fagley, Rev. William E. Gilroy, Mr.

Rolfe Cobleigh, Rev. Herbert D. Rugg, members of the Prudential Committee of the American Board and the Directors and Administrative Committee members of the Mome Boards.

4. That State Conferences and District Associations be advised to grant affiliated membership rather than full membership to ministers of other denominations who have reason to maintain double relationship.

5. That Article III, 1. (a) of the Constitution be amended to the effect that associations of six or more churches shall be entitled to elect delegates, as was provided in the original Constitution.

6. That the recommendation of the temporary Commission on Men's Work that it be discontinued and its work distributed through other agencies be approved.

7. That the Council formally accept the invitation of British Congregationalists to return their visit and that the Executive Committee be authorized to arrange for such a pilgrimage in connection with the International Council in 1930.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY

The last meeting of the Council, held in Omaha in 1927, took far-reaching action affecting the organization of our denominational agencies. Let us turn to the question of how these reorganizations are working out at the very start.

Reorganization

It might have been expected that considerable confusion would follow such radical changes as seemed to be involved. Any such confusion, however, has been hardly discernible.

The reorganizations of the foreign mission boards began before the Omaha meeting and has been completely perfected, so that now our foreign missionary work is under a single administration, in which the women who formerly operated through the Woman's Boards have effective participation upon the Prudential Committee and in the executive staff.

The reorganization provided that the several Home Boards should be administered by a common Board of Directors, with four Administrative Committees in as many departments. This form of operation has been perfected and is working far more smoothly than its advocates hoped could be the case in so short a time, and it may be confidently expected that any clumsiness of operation which still exists will in the near future be left behind.

The question of the merger of denominational periodicals was referred to the Commission on Missions which recommended the publication of the American Missionary as a monthly number of The Congregationalist. This plan has been in operation for too short a time to pronounce final judgment upon its outcome. It should be borne in mind also that it is capable of almost any development in this line which is desired by the constituency. Probably the most important factor in the whole equation is the question of an adequate subscription list. At this point there is involved the interest and loyalty of Congregationalists.

The plans for the Commission on Missions have been worked out almost exactly as outlined in the report of the Committee of Twelve. The one exception which might be worth noting would be the failure to provide "a promotional force of secretaries and others corresponding roughly to the present (1927) associate, departmental, assistant and district secretaries of the societies." This provision has been met only in part. The savings reported by the Commission on Missions are of course in a measure due to the reduction of this promotional force of secretaries. Whether or not this saving has been poor economy it would probably be presumptuous to attempt to say. It is not beside the mark, however, to call attention to the fact that what may seem to be a sizable budget for overhead does not appear to be such when the vast amount involved, not only in current income but in the establishment of large capital funds and the laying of broad foundations for the future is considered.

The important thing is that now we are concentrating our forces upon our work rather than upon the structure of our organization. Without doubt some momentum was lost in turning aside for a little to repair the machinery. It is for us now with the improved organization to more than regain the lost momentum.

Church Union

Congregationalists have always been open minded on the matter of church union. At the meeting of the Council in 1923 an extensive statement was made regarding the attitude of the denomination. Specific resolutions were voted also at Washington in 1925, and at the 1927 meeting the Commission on Interchurch Relations was specifically charged to promote all possible approach on the part of denominations of similar polity and ideals, and that particularly such approaches should be developed between the General Convention of the Christian Churches and the National Council of the Congregational Churches.

These instructions have been followed out by the Commission. In the various conferences held and in the effort to work out a possible plan of union some things emerge very clearly as definite lessons. First of all it is very evident that there is an eager spirit abroad earnestly desirous of seeing the unification of the Church of Christ.

The second thing which became very evident in such negotiations is that while we have executives in almost all departments of church interest and activity there is no one, or almost no one, giving time and attention to the important question of church union. This is left to the remnants of time which those who have other primary duties to perform can seize for it. The question is a vital one as to whether every denomination which has any passion for church union should not provide executives who working together should seek to guide the spirit for union and to remove the difficulties in the way of union.

Among the difficulties which appear are (a) creeds and other doctrinal statements; (b) sentiments including attachment to names, organizations and cultures, and (c) vested interests. By the last is meant the fact that almost every denomination holds property and funds given in trust for specific purposes often inextricably intertwined with denominational life and faith.

It becomes important therefore that some one should point the way or ways by which these difficulties may either cease to be difficulties or may be overcome. A study of the proposals for merger of the Christian churches and Congregational churches seems to reveal the ideal there set forth as making it possible to realize Christian unity in very reality while at the same time retaining doctrinal expressions or their absence, sentimental connections and all vested interests wholly undiverted from their original designations. Perhaps the most significant value attached to the possible adoption of the proposals of the two Commissions lies in this fact that there seems to be provided a way by which this may be done not only for these two denominations but for as many denominations as wish thus to realize unity while preserving historical, sentimental and vested values.

The State of the Churches

One can give of course only his own impressions, but to the Secretary the churches not only of our denomination but of all denominations seem dazed; not seriously so, but significantly so. The tremendous and far-reaching changes coming over society and in thought have come so suddenly as to make not only the churches but all established institutions stagger. The rapidity of modern life, the distraction of new inventions made available by phenomenal wealth, rapid changes in social and even moral conventions, revolutionary ideas in science, philosophy, art and religion, are all calling for hitherto unwanted readjustment in thought and action. That readjustment appears to be in process with much less of stress and strain than might have been expected.

Whether a part of this or not, it is evident that in the churches there is a good deal of uneasiness and discontent with leadership. Of course there are always churches which are dissatisfied with their pastors. It seems, however, that there are more of these now than in normal times. On the other hand there are more pastors who are uneasy and hoping for more satisfactory fields. This seems to the Secretary to be unjustified. In other words many a church has as good a pastor as it could expect, human nature being what it is, and many a pastor who is uneasy would best be content with his work and put his whole heart into it. It is too obvious to need argument that one dissatisfied person in a church can unsettle the activities of the entire church by spreading discontent. Anything which the churches can do in their fellowship with one another to discourage supersensitiveness on either side will be all to the good.

With regard to the spiritual life we seem to be in a period when the tension is relaxed. Immediately following the World War, and continuing into several years the spiritual atmosphere was dynamic, not to say charged with static. Men's minds and hearts were alert and responsive to every significant challenge. In contrast with this it is a laborious task today to secure the enthusiasm of the multitudes, and even of individuals, in great causes, as for example, in the missionary enterprise or evangelistic endeavor. Probably Congregationalists suffer less from this state of mind than do most Christian fellowships; nevertheless its effect is obvious to those who are engaged in philanthropic and religious endeavor. It is a time therefore for holding fast and for working hard, and withal a time for steadfastness of faith and the cultivation of the deep sources of soul life.

Secretarial Activities

Some may ask: What are the duties of the Secretary? As defined in By-law IV, these duties include: (a) keeping of records; (b) correspondence; (c) editing of the Year Book and other publications; (d) issuing notices; (e) aiding committees and commissions; (f) General Secretary of the Commission on Missions; (g) advice and help in constructive organization; (h) service to the churches; (i) representing the churches in interdenominational relations. This broad charter calls for a wide range of activity.

In the conduct of the Council office there is the keeping of the record of the Council itself; of its Executive Committee; the Corporation and the various commissions and committees. There is also the issuing of notices for the Council meeting, Executive Committee meetings, the Corporation meetings, the Commission meetings and the furnishing of the minutes of these various meetings to all entitled to them. Added to these services is the duty of general oversight of financial affairs for the Council, the Corporation and the Commission on Missions.

Addresses are called for on a wide range of topics before all kinds of audiences, including state conferences, district associations, denominational clubs, colleges, social organizations, particularly the churches, and most especially on special occasions, such as anniversaries, dedications, installations, and even special evangelistic services.

There are at present nine Commissions of the National Council, ranging from the Commission on Missions to certain temporary commissions, and in addition a number of committees. In this work the Associate Secretary shares with the General Secretary detailed attention in providing agenda of business, arranging for meetings, putting in form data for action, duplicating the minutes for distribution, notifying officers and committees of appointment, assisting special committees and officers in their tasks, and numberless details requiring attention. The largest of course of the Commission tasks are those of the Commission on Missions, the general guidance of which falls to the Secretary of the Council, particularly judicial questions of relationship between various departments and societies, and between the societies and the churches, as for example, the apportionment plan. In addition to the routine tasks the Secretary is here called on also for inspirational functions.

The close relationship of the various national missionary societies to the National Council makes it incumbent upon the Secretary to keep in close touch with all of these boards. This means attendance upon annual meetings, board meetings, inter-society gatherings and actual service for the Nominating Committee, and through the Home Board Cabinet of Secretaries. By way of illustration, during the past biennium one of the practical tasks has been that of working out the plan of merger of the American Missionary and The Congregationalist, requiring no inconsiderable amount of attention; also the setting in operation of the entire new plan of organization adopted at Washington and Omaha have called for much personal attention.

Conferences without number are necessary. In addition to the conferences called for in the above there are the relationships with the various state organizations and the contacts with the interdenominational agencies. Specifically the Secretary has given particular attention to the relationship with the Young Men's Christian Association through its Counselling Commission, of which he is a member, and to the Federal Council in its various branches, serving on its Executive Committee, its Administrative Committee, Committee on Structure and Function, Committee on Policy, Committee on National Broadcasting, on Literature and various special committees.

The action of the Omaha meeting of the Council expressing welcome to the British Pilgrimage, under which over twelve hundred British Congregationalists made a week's visit to America, entailed no little toil on the part of the National Council office and of its Secretary. The entertainment of so large a company of visitors filled us with some trepidation at the start, but the splendid co-operation of the churches of the country, and particularly of the churches of the Atlantic Coast, which was visited by the Pilgrims, made it a joy as well as a comparatively light task. Without doubt the effect of this Pilgrimage will be felt for years to come.

The travel of the General Secretary is necessarily extensive. During the past biennium, however, this has been confined to the section of the country east of Minnesota and Nebraska in the North, and Louisiana and Mississippi in the South. From that line eastward to the Atlantic travel has been extensive for the meeting of appointments, for public addresses, conferences, etc., in twenty different states, into many of which several trips were made. The apparent lack of attention to the far West was more than made up by the generous service rendered in that region by the Moderator and the Associate Secretary.

A casual reading of the above might give the impression that the Secretary's work was largely routine, mechanical and non-spiritual. The facts are quite the contrary. Much of even the routine work has the most vital spiritual connection, but immediate contacts with the spiritual interests are continuous through public speaking and literary output, and the Secretary wishes to record his sense of gratitude for the rich opportunity of contacts and service which the position affords.

THE REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

It falls to the lot of the Associate Secretary to arrange the work in the office, in order that the interests of the denominations may be advanced. We have been very fortunate during the year to have as workers in the office those who have combined a high degree of efficiency with a real spirit of cooperation so that the work has gone forward with dispatch and the relationships have been most cordial and helpful.

The office has correspondence with the various Boards, State Offices and a large number of pastors and other church workers. At the busy season of the year our receipt of mail frequently exceeds 200 letters per day. It is a rare thing for answers to be delayed. In addition to this there is a heavy correspondence with interdenominational and social agencies, all of which requires thought and time.

The shipping department, which is run in cooperation with the Commission on Missions, handles a large quantity of material and is of very great service to the churches by reason of the fact that this material goes out very quickly in response to their requests.

The expense of maintaining the office is below the budget allowance, and we are very proud of the fact that we are able to do an increasing amount of business with a decreasing cost.

It has been my pleasure to serve as Recording Secretary and also as Executive for a number of the Commissions of the National Council. In this capacity, I have been able to render some real service in the fields of Evangelism, International Relations, Interracial Relations, Mens Work and Law Enforcement. Each Commission, while primarily responsible for making a study of its own field of interest, carries forward educational and promotional work to the limit of facilities available. For a number of these Commissions, there are corresponding departments in the Education Society. It is the intent and purpose of the National Council office to foster the closest possible relationship between the Commissions of the Council and the various departments of the Education Society. We are hopeful that more effective cooperation may be developed and that the departments of the Education Society may be able to promote increasingly the interests which are under study by the various Commissions.

The Commission on Evangelism has pushed forward its program with growing effectiveness. The results of the work of this agency in our denomination, which now covers ten years, are quite satisfactory. What was only occasionally thought ten years ago, is generally accepted now, that the religious work of the church will yield itself to programization in carrying forward the plan of religious work for the local church, and there have been brought into practice the best principles of a true educational process. All the material that has been prepared for pastors, as well as that prepared for the church's use, has been developed along pedagogical lines; and while the principles of modern education as they relate to religious work have not been specifically advertised or commented on, yet they have underlain and have directed the entire program. The fact that so many Congregational churches throughout the nation have set themselves to study their own local situations and to develop a program of religious work to meet the conditions which they find, is one of the most encouraging features in modern church work in America.

The Congregational churches, because of their history and their principles, and their common traditions, not only in the field of religion and education, but likewise in their ideals of community responsibility, have peculiar advantages in this move to adapt the work of the local church to the particular needs of their own communities. While the local church as a member of the Association, State Conference, and National Council, and as a participating agency in the National Missionary Boards, has its world-wide responsibilities for the welfare of the Kingdom and the maintenance of religious agencies, still its primary duty is to minister to the needs of its own community, and so to adapt its work that that community, whatever may be its characteristics, shall find at its center a Christian organization keenly alive to its needs.

The work that has been attempted during this decade has been not so much to build up a national program of evangelism, but rather to encourage each church to study its own community and to assist that church in every possible way to deepen and enrich the spiritual life of its own people, that is to develop its own evangelistic program and by so doing, make its own contribution to the building up of the Kingdom both at home and abroad.

In connection with the work of the Seminar on Worship, I have had the rare opportunity of meeting hundreds of pastors, in various sections of the country, in serious discussion of the whole problem of worship in our churches. It is most refreshing to find that the interest in worship is so wide-spread and alert. I am much pleased to report that after two year's careful study, I can state most positively that the revival of worship in Congregational churches is in no sense an evidence of a decadent church life, but rather that worship as a means of enriching the service is inspired with a vigorous evangelistic spirit, and that its affect on the preaching the gospel is invigorating.

The program of worship is thoroughly educational, both for pastors and people, and we are seeking to put into practice the best lessons of modern pedagogical practice. There has seldom been in the history of Congregationalism a more enthusiastic cooperative program than our present denominational plan for enriching the service of worship.

One of the most pleasant duties that has fallen to my lot has been that of working with the Commission on Inter-racial Relations. This Commission held a two day meeting at Claremont early in the biennium, and made a rather careful study of its field of activity. I have a feeling that such a procedure is in every way commendable. When a group meet for two days, it is able, in that period of time, to make far greater progress in the careful study of its work, than when it meets simply as an administrative agency.

I should hope that all our Commissions might be able to arrange early in the biennium for a meeting covering the better part of two days at least where they might truly find themselves and explore their field of activity and thus be able to work to best advantage.

In connection with the Commission on Inter-racial Relations, I have had the pleasure of working with Rev. E. E. Lindquist and Rev. D. B. Hall in making a study of the Indian situation. The report of that sub-committee is included in the report of the Interracial Commission. This sub-report is well worth careful study.

Two years ago the National Council established the Calendar Service, which has met with very satisfactory response. This service is planned to meet these requirements: First, where churches desire a weekly parish paper the Calendar sheets with the inside printed with general material, enables the church to secure second class mailing rates and to use the two outside pages for church announcements and church news. Second, where churches desire to provide general reading along with their Sunday morning bulletin, they use the outside two pages for their order of service and parish announcements.

From the beginning, the material has been selected by Mrs. A. H. Nelson of White Plains, New York, a woman of broad education and rare accomplishments. As an editor she has been eminently successful in understanding the needs of the churches and in providing very high class material to meet those needs. She has been assisted in this by Miss Ella G. Sparrow, who has been the efficient publisher and circulation manager.

This service has been of great help to those churches using it. The circulation is around 50,000 copies per week. Plans are being made for extending the circulation if possible to 70,000. When this figure is reached, the service will be self-supporting, as it ought to be.

The Council at Omaha honored me by electing me as one of the fraternal delegates to the Congregational Union of England and Wales. I attended the session in London last May, and was introduced by the Moderator's traditional phrase, "May I remind you, sir, that our affection for you will be in direct proportion to your brevity." My brevity evidently was all that they desired or expected, for surely the cordiality of the brethren of the English Union was unbounded. I feel that the interchange of fraternal visitors between these two great bodies of Congregationalists ought to be a matter of serious consideration by both Councils, and that the beneficent opportunities which would arise out of such mutual interchange, would go a great way towards keeping these two branches of Congregationalism in closest brotherhood. It was my pleasure while in England to meet quite a number of groups of English clergymen and to discuss with them many interests relating to American church life, and to receive from them much of the storied tradition of our common ancestry. It was a great joy to accompany Dr. Wilson in travelling to America with the Celtic Pilgrimage and to bear my part in assisting to make the voyage a period of preparation for the visit to America. This was a richly rewarding experience.

It has also been my responsibility to do my part in representing our Congregational interests in interdenominational and other agencies. In connection with this, let me say, that in these great agencies, such as the Federal Council, The World Alliance, The Home Missions Conference, The Foreign Missions Conference, and other beneficent organizations, the Congregational group is making a very real contribution, a contribution thoroughly in harmony with the underlying principles of our church life, and out of all proportion to our numerical strength.

STATISTICAL REPORT

"The Secretary is directed to present at each stated meeting comprehensive and comparative summaries for the two years preceding." (By-law XV)

It is to be regretted that the date of the meeting of the National Council is such that at this writing it is impossible to give the figures for the year 1928. The following figures therefore have as their latest year 1927, and in the comparisons the bienniums referred to are the years 1924 and 1925 for the earlier biennium and 1926 and 1927 for the later biennium.

The accompanying table of comparative statistics offers an opportunity for extensive study of the development of the denomination, and further statistics are furnished in the annual Year Book.

Losses and Gains

Losses are recorded in the later biennium for the number of churches, the total amount of benevolences and the number of members of Sunday Schools. On the other hand, gains are recorded for the number of church members, the number of ministers, the number of ordinations, the number of the Young People's Societies and members of these societies, the amount of home expenses, the average salary of pastors, the value of church property, the total income of the missionary societies, the amount of invested funds held by the churches and the number of churches with the larger membership. On the whole the statistics show a healthy condition of the churches; in fact a condition of health far beyond popular conception, or misconception.

The Churches

The tendency to larger and fewer churches continues. In 1925 there were 5,636 churches; in 1927, 5,548, a loss of 88. In membership, however, there is a gain of 26,898, the figures being for 1925, 901,660 and in 1927, 928,558. The number of additions during the biennium was 145,211, an average of 72,605 per annum, as against a total of 149,269 in the preceding biennium, or an average of 74,634. The earlier biennium, however, included 6,296 added by merger with the Evangelical Protestants. If we eliminate these irrelevant figures the additions were larger in the later period. In both cases the number is considerably larger than the average for recent years. The number of additions on confession was 81,902 as compared with 89,854 the preceding biennium. The losses by revision were larger, being 58,019 as compared with 55,838 the preceding two years. This increase in the number of revisions and the small decrease in the number of additions and the merger with the Evangelical Protestants makes the net gain for the two years somewhat smaller than for the preceding term, the figures being 26,898 as compared with 40,331. With regard to the size of the churches, in the following figures the earlier number applies to the year '27 and the latter to '25; Churches of over 1,000 members, 97 as compared with 83; between 500 and 1,000, 298 and 280; between 100 and 500, 2,161 as compared with 2,083; churches under 100, 2,982 compared with 3,182. Of these last, churches of less than 50 members, 1,777 compared with 1,889. There were in 1927, 545 churches conducting services in foreign languages, which is ten fewer than in 1925.

Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies

The number of Sunday School members in 1927 was 742,270 compared with 797,987 in 1925, a decrease of 55,717. This is accounted for in part by a definite change in the recording of the number of missionary Sunday Schools. The number of Young People's Societies in 1927 was 3,085 and in 1925, 2,996, a gain of 89 in two years the members of the Young People's Societies numbered in 1927, 148,047, and in 1925, 121,910, a gain of 26,137.

Ministers and Salaries

There appears to be a gain of 99 ministers in the two-year period, the figures being 5,609 as compared with 5,510. There were 202 ordained in the biennium as compared with 177 in the earlier period, a gain of 25. A slight gain in the average salaries of the pastors has been recorded, the figures standing 2,092 for 1927 as against 1,969 for 1925.

Finances

Home expenses for the biennium amounted to $44,151,353 as compared with $40,229,822, a gain of $3,931,531, or an average gain of $1,955,765 per annum. Here it should be observed that 1927 showed a loss of $47,717 over 1926. The value of church property reported by the churches in 1927 amounted to $173,463,701 as compared with $155,452,752, a gain of $18,010,949. The invested funds increased from $17,824,050 in 1925 to $23,699,175 in 1927, a gain of $5,875,115.

Benevolences

Our apportionment benevolences for the national, missionary and educational societies and the state conferences amounted in 1926 and 1927 to $6,234,293, as compared with $6,291,836 the preceding biennium, or a loss of $57,543, being 0.9% decrease. The average gifts for the eight-year period since the World Movement were $3,028,620, and for 1927, $3,076,663, or $48,043 more than the average. The total income of our missionary and educational organizations available for current budgets amounted in 1927 to $5,313,566 as compared with $5,088,296 in 1925, or a gain of $224,570. This of course includes in addition to the contributions of the living income from invested funds, legacies, matured conditional gifts and special individual gifts. Adding to our apportionment receipts gifts for special Congregational objects and other than denominational objects, both of which items are very uncertain, show total benevolences reported in the Year Book of $9,061,151 in '26 and '27 as compared with $9,892,096 the preceding term, or a loss of $830,945. Not very much dependence should be placed in these last figures.

In so far as statistics are dependable indices of life there is cause for encouragement in the above record, and with the encouragement stimulation to improvement.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON MISSIONS

Broadly speaking the Commission on Missions has two general functions: (1) Judicial; (2) Promotional. Judicial functions have to do with determining questions of common concern among the several missionary causes, including forms of organization and relationship. These functions are called judicial by accommodation since in reality they are for the most part advisory. Recommendations are made to the Societies and to the National Council.

The term promotional is used in the broad sense to cover the "disseminating of information, cultivating interest and procuring funds." For this work the Commission is not only a commission of the National Council but a committee of each of the missionary organizations, and as such, reporting to them as well as to the Council.

From 1923 to 1927 the judicial functions of the Commission centered very largely in the work of missionary reorganization. This work being done these functions have been few since the meeting of the National Council in 1927.

Reorganization Developments

There is little to be said regarding the development of the reorganization plans adopted at Washington and Omaha beyond the statement that the plans are working smoothly; much more smoothly in fact than might have been anticipated. This is best evidenced perhaps in the development of the spirit of oneness at the annual Midwinter Meetings.

The large development consequent upon the action of the Omaha Meeting occurred in connection with the unifying of the work of the Home Boards. This has gone forward with but a minimum of obstacles to overcome and with evident advantages at not a few points.

One large question not determined at Omaha, but referred to the Commission, had to do with the proposal for the merger of the periodicals. The Commission did not see fit to urge the American Board to go counter to the leadership of its staff and Prudential Committee for the consummation of a merger of the Missionary Herald with the Congregationalist and American Missionary. The Commission did, however, advise the Home Board to merge the American Missionary with The Congregationalist and this has been done. At this writing it is too early to appraise this departure. On the financial side the economy promises to be approximately $19,797 per annum. The subsidy of $15,000 per year for The Congregationalist is consequently no longer recommended.

The Missionary Education Committee has been organized along the lines suggested at Omaha, the authority of the Commission to modify those lines not having been exercised as yet. The Commission understands that this authority continues.

The hope that was expressed by the National Council on recommendation of the Committee of Twelve that there might be a joint Treasurer of the Home Boards has been realized to the extent of the election of the same person as Treasurer of the Home Boards that have offices in New York City. This same person has been made Treasurer of the Department of Receipts for all the Home Societies.

The provision whereby state representation is to be had on the Prudential Committee of the American Board and the Board of Directors of the Home Board is gradually being worked out, although it will be a few years before it will be in complete operation.

Savings

One of the insistent questions which is being asked is: What saving has accrued from the reorganization plans? In reality this is a minor question, but it is a concrete one; at the same time one to which an absolute answer can never be given.

The Commission appointed a sub-committee to make a study and report to the best of its ability what the savings appear to be. That committee reports apparent savings based on printed reports of $100,826.93, including the estimated savings on the merger of the periodicals, as per working agreement with the Publishing Society. Of the total $60,803.54 accrues to the American Board and $40,023.39 to the Home Board.

Judicial Functions

Of the so-called judicial functions apportionment questions are perennial. The Commission has regularly recommended apportionments to the several states. A schedule is appended to this report.

As a part of the apportionment work the Survey Committee has annually made a study of the needs of the several Societies and of the different self-supporting states, and made the recommendations in each case. More and more these recommendations have been followed by the State Conferences and the actual operating percentages are now very near to those adopted by the Commission on Missions.

By action of the Council in 1927 the societies were assessed for $16,000 for interdenominational agencies. This is no longer recommended by the Commission, but instead recommendation has been made to the American Board that they conduct negotiations directly with the American Bible Society and the Central Bureau for the Relief of Churches in Europe after 1929, and that instead of the $8,000 of the $16,000 referred to above for the Federal Council it should share in the undesignated funds passing through the receiving treasury of the Home Boards, on the basis of 3 per cent of the total apportionment, to be paid by the Receiving Treasurer directly to the Federal Council, just as he pays their share to each of the societies. In the Year Book this will appear as a credit to each church in the Home Board column, and in the explanation of that column it will be made clear that this amount is included. It is further understood that such payments to the Federal Council shall not exceed $8,000 in any one year; also that the Federal Council shall be defined as the only organization entitled to such classification and that the churches shall be notified of this plan in the publications of the Commission, and that they are free to request the Federal Council to remove their name from the list of individual appeals which the Federal Council still makes where churches are in the habit of contributing directly.

A careful study was given to the question of conditional gift rates and a new schedule adopted more nearly in accord with rates offered by other denominations and interdenominational agencies. The results appear to be a very material increase in the number of conditional gifts and in the total amount thus contributed.

The question of annuities for unordained missionary workers has been constantly under study, and the Annuity Fund has been requested by the Commission to present at this meeting of the Council a definite plan for recommendation to the societies and agencies. This plan will be found on another page.

The Commission has joined with the Executive Committee of the Council in providing wholesale insurance for the secretarial and office staff along lines followed by several of the societies.

Facing the emergency which confronted the Extension Boards at the beginning of 1928, the Commission made recommendations for various measures of relief, including more favorable percentages for the Home Boards from the State Conferences.

Another relief measure had to do with approving appeals to the churches in general for special offerings for the relief of the sufferers from hurricane in Porto Rico and in Florida. These special appeals are seldom made by the Commission, but on such occasions they seem justified.

The Commission has requested the American Board to consider the desirability of arranging for the same Nominating Committee as the Home Boards, at least for the sessions held in connection with the National Council.

The Commission gave consideration to the proposal for merger with the Christian Churches and records its belief that if consummated the necessary adjustments in the work of the Commission can be made.

Promotional Functions

From the standpoint of Promotion the two chief features in the merger legislation enacted at Washington and Omaha, were, first, the election of the Commission on Missions as the Committee of Promotion by each one of the Missionary Societies; and second, the election of the Secretary of the Commission as the Promotional Secretary, or as the Secretary of Promotion by each one of the Societies.

In performing its duties as a Committee of Promotion for the Missionary Societies, the Commission has devoted no small part of its annual meeting to this phase of its work; which has also been true of the meetings of the Executive Committee. But the Commission has mainly performed the duties assigned it as a Committee of Promotion through the Promotional Council, which is distinctly referred to in the enactments at Washington and Omaha, as the administrative arm of the Commission for this phase of its duties.

During the year ending February 1, 1928 the Promotional Council held nine meetings; and during the calendar year ending February 1, 1929 it held six meetings. Being composed of the men and women on the staffs of the several societies which are actually engaged in the work of Promotion, the Promotional Council is able to function as "a genuine creative democracy." Each Chairman of the Promotional Council, during the two years under review, has been able, in his report to the Commission on Missions, to speak of a steady improvement in the way in which the Council did its work. This is due in part to the development of a better technique in the arrangements for, and in the conduct of its meetings, and also to a real increase in the spirit and purpose of cooperation.

The Secretary of the Commission in the field of Promotion, who is also the Secretary of Promotion of the several Boards, is the Executive Officer of the Promotional Council, and spends a good deal of his time in preparing for its meetings. He also has other important relationships. Indeed, as he has defined his work in his report to the Commission, it is mainly one of relationships, such as to the Administrative Committees of the Societies, whose meetings he is expected to attend so far as possible; and to the Regional Offices and Regional Committees, whose work he must try to co-ordinate with the National plans and with the State Superintendents and State Boards, where a similar need for co-ordination is apparent.

Moreover, it seems to be the duty of the Secretary of the Commission, who is charged with Promotion, to visit the different sections of the country just so far as he can in an effort to encourage a National point of view. This may be accomplished by an explanation of what the Commission on Missions, the Administrative bodies, and the Missionary Societies are trying to accomplish, and quite as much by a report to these administrative bodies of the points of view and reactions to their policies which are to be found in the several States and sections.

Concerning the legislation enacted at Washington and Omaha, there have naturally developed difference of an interpretation. The real question is—can we have unified Promotion and yet that freedom of initiative? No one who has watched the developments of these past two years can honestly question the possibility of affirmative answer to this question. As a matter of fact, it is increasingly being answered in the affirmative, and there is hope that the further on we get the more we shall be able to have the kind of working together which means not that people shall be dictated to by others but that they shall loyally and eagerly carry out plans which they have had a full share in making.

Reference may be made to re-organization of the staff of the Commission whereby increased economy is secured with no substantial decrease in efficiency. Miss Lucy V. Seidler has succeeded Rev. Harold G. Vincent as Office Secretary, and has also taken over the duties of Miss Alice M. English, who was Assistant Treasurer and Cashier. Mrs. D. Foster Updike, after two years of painstaking and sacrificial service as Associate Secretary of the Commission has left our work, and her successor has not yet been appointed.

Regional Organization

The Regional organization is now fully set up. The entire country is covered, but in a way that is suited to the desires of each section. In New England there is a Regional Committee, which meets from time to time, and of which Rev. Judson L. Cross is the Executive Secretary. Mr. Cross, however, also is serving the American Missionary Association as its representative in New England. The State of New York is regarded as a Region by itself, and once a year its Committee on Systematic Benevolences meets as a Regional Committee. Naturally the Regional office service is rendered by the New York headquarters of the Commission. The Middle Atlantic district is likewise served by the New York headquarters. The Region of the Southeast has appropriate Regional Committees, with Rev. W. Knighton Bloom as Regional Secretary. Dr. Bloom it will be remembered is the Secretary of the Eastern District of the Church Extension Boards, and his salary is wholly paid by those organizations. His service to the Commission is rendered possible by a readjustment as to office and travel, a part of which is paid by the Commission. The Mid-West Region, covering 17 states doubtless is the most fully organized of the Regions. A full time Secretary and Associate Secretary serve under the direction of a Regional Committee consisting of approximately fifty people, which meets once a year, with an Executive Committee meeting more frequently. The Regional office is fully organized to serve the various needs, not only of the 17 states in this region, but also of the Pacific slope so far as that section is not served by its own State Offices. The Region of the Pacific slope employs no officers as a Region, but has a Regional Committee which meets as occasion requires, and whose main function has been the arrangement of the very successful Pacific Coast Missionary Congress last September. Washington, Oregon and Idaho have asked for a more definite service, and this has been brought about by organizing them into an area with a woman worker serving under the direction of an Areal Committee. This does not mean that in any way these States have broken away from the rest of the Pacific Slope Region.

Promotional Costs

Considerable study has been given to the question of Promotional costs, with an effort to see how, taking into account the entire work of Promotion, which is done both by the several societies and by the Commission, can be more economically and efficiently done. Progress has undoubtedly been made but with equal certainty greater progress ought to be achieved. A considerable portion of this saving of $100,000 on account of the merger referred to in a preceding paragraph is in the realm of Promotion; for example, the Regional set up just described is down on the budget of the Commission at $50,000, which constitutes about one-third of the entire budget. When one recalls the district secretaries and offices that were previously maintained at Boston, at New York, and at Chicago (where there is a very marked reduction in office space and in number of persons employed), and at San Francisco, and thinks of the set up above described, he sees what a change has been brought about and how, to some extent at least, the entire country is more thoroughly and more cooperatively covered. The only respect in which there has been an increase of expense is in connection with the assembling of the Regional Committees. This, however, is the necessary price we must pay for democracy. Unless our whole work is to be administered and promoted by small committees living on the eastern seaboard we must apparently have something like this Regional set up, which enables people practically from every state to have a real share in directing our work of Promotion.

So far as the budget of the Commission is concerned, it was over run by the amount of $18,890 in the year ending February 1, 1928, mainly on account of the starting of the Project work and Thank Offering work, the "Potter's Wheel," and other forms of activity that could not be postponed. For the year ending February 1, 1929 the Commission kept within its budget, with a margin of $2,482. It should be said that the over-draft in 1927 was provided for without calling for an extra amount from the Societies, by reason of our having kept under the budget in previous years.

Promotional Plans

There is not space to do more than refer to the further development of old plans and to the starting of new plans during the period under review. Under the head of old plans that have been further developed may be mentioned the Project Plan, the Calendar of Prayer, and the Thank Offering. Under the head of new plans may be mentioned the work done in behalf of the Christian Use of Money, the new liaison arrangement by which National Secretaries undertake definite responsibility for specific states, and the effort which has now been vigorously started to improve the quality of our stereopticon lectures.

The year 1928 was characterized by a remarkable set of meetings. Beginning with the Portland Missionary Congress in September, followed in October by the American Board meeting in Bridgeport, the New England Regional meeting at Manchester, New Hampshire, and the Mid-Western Woman's Regional meeting at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. These meetings were all characterized by what seemed to be an unusual sense of the presence of God, and there is reason to believe that the same atmosphere has been carried over into the meetings of the current year.

In this spirit the Plan of Advance, which will be presented to the Council, may be spoken of. The Plan was adopted by the Commission on Missions at the suggestion of the Promotional Council, after unusual care had been taken in preparing it, and unusual time had been given to discussing it. It was adopted by the Commission with the following vote:

"The Commission on Missions, profoundly moved by the thrilling presentation of the needs and opportunities for which our Congregational Churches are distinctly responsible and having heard the challenging Plan of Advance suggested by the Promotional Council, and believing that the churches are in a mood for this stimulating message, hereby earnestly approves the Plan. Further, recognizing our personal responsibility in thus making this Plan our own, both for ourselves and for the states and churches which we represent, we, the members of the Commission, commit ourselves, heart and soul, to its vigorous prosecution, and call upon all our ministers and churches to join heartily with us in this high endeavor."

This vote doubtless referred in some degree to the second paragraph of the Plan, which is as follows:

II. Accordingly, the aim of the plan of advance must have at its heart the development of human personality in loyalty to Christ.

We want people to come more fully under the tremendously dynamic influence of Christian missions as a part of their Christian experience.

We want many more people in our churches to come under this influence.

We want them to see that Christian missions is a personal Christlike response to definite human need.

We want missions to take its rightful place at the center of the life of every Christian and every church because only so can the individual Christian and the individual church obtain the breadth of outlook and strength of purpose which are essential to full-grown Christian character and service.

Studies of the trends of giving, which have been to some degree carried on by the officers of the Commission but which have been more thoroughly pursued by others, make it clear that there is a real tendency among our churches, which is shared by other denominations, to lessen support of our distinctively missionary enterprises. This cannot be accounted for by anything less than a question as to loyalty to the deeper implications of our Christian religion. Any work that is done to increase the support of our missionary enterprises must, therefore, take into account these deeper implications. It was with this in mind that the Plan of Advance was projected, and from this point of view, above all, it is presented to the Council.

Missionary Education

The Committee on Missionary Education was authorized at Omaha in 1927. Among the results of its work the following may be noted:

1. Materials issued. Improved graded materials for Primary, Junior and older groups under the general title of World Service Programs. A manual for leaders "Missionary Education in the Local Church," and an accompanying folder "How to Have Missionary Education in the Church."

2. Materials in preparation. A wall map illustrating Congregational Home Missions is being prepared by Dr. Davies.

3. Field Work. The Committee has worked out with care a plan for the more effective development of missionary education in the churches. This plan, which is being steadily pushed with the cooperation of states and regional offices, women's organizations and the Department of Missionary Education of the Education Society, is showing good results. Local churches are being helped through personal conferences, correspondence, public addresses at association, state and regional meetings.

4. Steady progress has been made toward the integration of missionary education and religious education in the church school. The project plan has been taken into account in the development of this work.

5. Christian Use of Money. This committee has cooperated with the Promotional Council through a joint committee on the Christian Use of Money and various helpful pieces of literature have been issued.

6. Savings in Cost. Cooperative measures in the production of program materials have resulted in increased effectiveness, with a considerable reduction in the total cost to the boards.

7. Relation to Promotional Council. The plan of organization of this committee involved close relations with the Promotional Council, and mutual representation in the membership of each body. The spirit of this provision has been carried out in cooperative work and interchange of information and reports.

The Laymen's Advisory Committee

The Laymen's Advisory Committee has concentrated its efforts on two major tasks. In the first place, it has sought to give Congregational men and women a new vision of the magnitude, scope and achievement of the Congregational enterprise in the local community and in the United States and overseas. To this end it has organized dinner meetings in sixteen States, where 10,000 men have been newly reminded of the dividends which have already been declared on their church investments. It has assisted in the organizing of expeditions to fields of work of the American Missionary Association and the Church Extension Boards, a total enrollment of nearly 30 men and women having spent a fortnight on the average as members of these tours. These people have not only increased their offerings to the work but have given largely of time for public addresses.

In the use of "Congregational Corporations," circulated largely through the cooperation of pastors, groups of lawyers and bankers have been convened and valuable contacts have been made in the interests of bequests, accurately drawn in behalf of local churches, State conferences, and missionary societies.

The second of the two major efforts has been that of securing financial commitments for the work. Your committee has been called in counsel in connection with the making of bequests in several of which instances amounts of considerable magnitude were involved. We have also taken a laboring oar in the conditional gift campaign for higher rates. We have also given ourselves to a more vigorous promotion of the conditional gift idea, with the result that in the last year alone such gifts were tripled in number and almost doubled in total sum, as compared with statistics for 1927. By private interviews and public presentations this committee has thus laid foundations which should secure substantial and increased returns through the years.

Recommendations

The Commission recommends:

1. That the apportionment of approximately $5,000,000 be continued.

2. That the National Council incorporate in its standing rules the order of procedure which it has voted at its last three meetings to the effect that "the Secretary of the Council be instructed that actions of the Council affecting the several Missionary Societies be referred to the respective meetings of the Societies in connection with the meeting of the Council at which such actions are taken, with specific recommendation to the Societies that they hold adjourned meetings where necessary in order to act upon such references."

3. That the budget of the Commission for 1930 and for 1931 be fixed at $150,000 with the understanding that this may be increased by amounts considered necessary on concurrent action of the Commission, the Prudential Committee of the American Board and the Board of Directors of the Home Boards.

4. That the Nominating Committees of the National Boards ask the State Conference Offices that nominations of state representatives for these Boards be made through trustees or boards of directors of the State Conferences for the use of such Nominating Committees in Detroit.

5. That the National Council recommend to State Conferences that in the future these nominations be regularly made by the board of directors or trustees of such Conferences.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON EVANGELISM AND DEVOTIONAL LIFE

The Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life has always conceived that it occupied a position at the very heart of our church enterprise. Without disparaging the essential character or service of any other society, commission or organization in our Congregational fellowship, this Commission has believed that it was charged with responsibility for the most vital interests not only of the Congregational churches but of the whole nation. As surely as we believe that there is "none other name under heaven whereby we must be saved," so surely do we hold that the dual task of our Commission, to stimulate the search for God and deepen the experience of Him, constitutes the gravest obligation and the supreme reward of Christian people. Toward the accomplishment of this result the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life has labored during the biennium with diligence, consistency of purpose and extraordinary harmony of spirit.

A re-reading of the report submitted in 1927 makes it clear that the Commission has moved during the biennium in a clearly foreseen path. The report of 1927 stated:

"The Commission has set for itself during the next biennial the task of trying to find what are the materials available for worship, and second what is the technique. That is, what is there in worship that can be taught by one who knows, and learned by one who desires to enter more fully into the Life of God."

The distinctly new undertakings in which the Commission has engaged during the two years have been in pursuit of this program. Conferences on worship were held in the fall of 1927 under the direction of the able and indefatigable secretary of the Commission. These conferences were ten in number, and took place in Congregational centers all the way from Buffalo to Berkeley, California. Other conferences have been held at Hartford, Connecticut and Northampton, Massachusetts. The program at each conference was prepared with scrupulous care, for the purpose of making the discussion both elevated and definite. It is not too much to say that these conferences on worship have revealed an almost pathetic hunger on the part of our ministers for suggestion, guidance and definite instruction on this vital matter. At a recent Convocation of the ministers of a certain state, one of our eminent ministers was scheduled to deliver addresses on the personal religious life. In the outcome, all the addresses were two-thirds concerned with matters of public worship, and the questions of the ministers were entirely so. The truth is, that throughout the United States there is an awakening to the necessity of providing those means and methods by which the soul can see God in his holiness, beauty and elevation. Whereas no sane person would deny that God can be and often is found under circumstances that may be repellent or even revolting, it is still true that as people advance in culture and refinement they demand increasingly that the places and forms of worship should be more and more a perfect expression of their own best cultural life. No Congregationalist would for a moment attempt to attach sacredness to any particular form or ceremony, but throughout the United States our congregations are increasingly convinced that crudity of expression and lack of thought in the organization of the services are not the evidences of spiritual possession.

In addition to the conferences on worship, the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life has sponsored a series of worship seminars. These have been held during the biennium at Kingston, Rhode Island, Sunapee, New Hampshire and Short Beach, Connecticut. These seminars were composed of a number of ministers especially invited because of their interest in the problem of worship and their ability to contribute thereto. The seminar has only just begun to issue the results of its discussions, but will shortly put before our churches suggested orders of worship for the usual morning worship, the communion, reception of members and other services. The seminar is also at work upon a Book of Prayers, the publication of which will in due time be recommended to the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life.

From the seminars on worship through the office of the Commission are also being sent to the ministers of our denomination letters and leaflets containing practical suggestions on the conduct of worship. Valuable reports by sub-committees have been issued in inexpensive form dealing with the necessity of the recovery of worship as a significant factor in our church life, prepared by Dr. Raymond A. Calkins and Rev. William H. Spence. A second report, by Dr. Howard J. Chidley and President Ozora S. Davis, dealt with "Architecture and Worship." In a short time a third article on the "Psychological Principles of Worship" which has been prepared by Rev. Douglas Horton will be issued.

In the meantime the type of work to which the Commission gave itself a number of years ago has not been neglected. Systematically the Church Year Program has been put before pastors and churches, presenting the normal religious activities of a church through the fall, winter and spring seasons. Undoubtedly our churches have been greatly stimulated thereby, and pastors have been educated in the methods whereby churches are enabled to extend the spirit of hospitality, recruit new members and deepen the spiritual life. By advertisement in The Potter's Wheel, the necessity of presenting a well formulated and rational plan has been kept before our ministers. The Lenten program is winning the allegiance of a steadily increasing proportion of our churches, as is witnessed by the stupendous sale of the publications of the Commission. The commission believes with all humility that it has been instrumental in meeting a genuine craving on the part of both our ministers and congregations, through its devotional publications.

It is worthy to note that in 1928 535,706 copies of the Fellowship of Prayer, issued under the auspices of this Commission, were printed and distributed. The preparation and publication of The Fellowship of Prayer has been a unique service on the part of our denomination to Protestant America; and those who have given of the depth of their emotion and the elevation of their thought to the production of The Fellowship of Prayer in successive years have a right to feel that they have contributed significantly to the common devotional life of the Church of Christ.

Through the intelligent interest of one of our leading ministers in the work of the Commission a legacy of $43,013.38 was left to the Corporation for the National Council for the benefit of the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life. This generous provision for the work of the Commission has enabled us to hold the conferences that have been mentioned and institute the seminars on worship. It is the purpose of the Commission during the next few years to carry on earnestly and devoutly the study of the principles of worship and encourage the practice of more reverent and fruitful forms of worship in our churches.

No one who reviews carefully and justly the work of the Commission from the time of its beginning to the present day and notes the response made by ministers and people to the leadership of the Commission along the lines of a deepening of the devotional life cannot fail of the conviction that there is a deep and genuine craving on the part of people for the nourishment of the distinctly spiritual life. Our churches have tried many experiments in the course of forty years with sincere desire to do our full duty and to interpret adequately the Gospel of our Lord. We have responded to voices that have summoned us as Christian churches into the many fields of endeavor.

Let us believe that none of this striving after an adequate presentation of the Gospel has been in vain. Religious life in most of the centers of population is on a distinctly high plane, but when all is said and done it remains true that there is one source of power and one satisfying reward, namely, in the profound and sincere experience of the human soul of the redeeming grace of God Who is the Father of our Lord, Jesus Christ.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON INTER-RACIAL RELATIONS

The task committed to us is almost unlimited in scope. It is impossible for busy men and women scattered over the whole country adequately to fulfill it without some paid officer giving full time to it. We have, however, given much time and effort to the study of Inter-racial relations and to carrying on a program of education for alleviating race prejudice. As a means of promoting and understanding racial friendship we have urged the study of race relations in our churches. We have diligently thought through certain specific problems referred to us.

The last National Council desired that special attention be given to a study of race relations in the Pacific Southwest, with particular reference to the Orientals and Mexicans. Also the specific study of "The proposal that the American Indian be released from Federal trusteeship," was referred to us. These tasks we have carried on while not unmindful of other problems like Negro-white relations. The active members of the commission were selected from the Southwest for convenience in addressing themselves to these special studies.

Our activities can be grouped under the following:

(1) We have served as a clearing house for information and suggestions in this field.

We have carried on considerable correspondence on Race Relations with interested individuals, committees and societies all over the country. Many requests have been received for bibliography and help on Race Relations for schools of missions. Information has been gathered as to work being done by other denominational groups and missionary societies. Our general conclusion is that the Congregationalists are not behind any other denomination in the intelligence, range and devotion of their service for inter-racial betterment.

(2) We have cooperated with many efforts in the Inter-racial field, both in our own denomination and in inter-denominational groups. We shared in the Institute of International Relations at Riverside, Calif., which deals in part with Inter-racial questions. We cooperated in the Conference of Congregational Boards engaged in Spanish speaking work, held in Los Angeles. Some of our members represented us in other conferences held in various sections of the country. We were partners with the Department of Social Relations of the Education Society in the seminar in Chicago in April, 1928 on "The Church and Race Relations." We have had hearty cooperation in the study of Inter-racial relations and in educating our churches in them, with the A. M. A. and C. E. S. Special mention should be noted of assistance from Mrs. J. J. Pearsall and Secretary G. A. Hinman and Secretary H. C. Herring. Secretary F. L.

Fagley of the National Council has been of great assistance through the biennium. We have cooperated with the Federal Council's Commission on Inter-racial relations, of which Dr. G. E. Haynes, also a member of our own commission, is the secretary. We also shared in the Claremont, Calif. conferences of "The Friends of the Mexicans."

(3) We have furnished material for Race Relations Sunday, published suggestions for Race Relations programs in our churches, and sent out to all our churches the excellent program and bibliography of the Federal Council Race Relations Commission. This was done to avoid duplication in getting out another of our own. Copies of J. H. Oldham's pamphlet "Christianity and Race Relations" have been sent to many who were interested in this subject.

(4) A very successful two day seminar was held at Claremont, Calif. in the buildings of Pomona College, attended by all of the active and several of the other members of our commission, as well as by a number of experts and others interested in inter-racial relations. Chief attention was given to the matter of our relations with the Mexicans, with some to the Orientals and Filipinos of the Pacific slope. Suggestions from this seminar are:

(a) Request the A. M. A. to make a survey of conditions among the Korean, Hindu and Filipino groups on the Pacific slope, in cooperation with the State Conferences concerned.

(b) A renewed conviction that the Orientals should be placed on the "quota" basis, like other peoples.

(c) Mexican Immigration should be much further restricted and we favor a Joint High Commission of Mexico and the United States to cooperate in plans to limit it. Our judgment is that the "quota" basis may be unworkable, as applied to Mexicans, inasmuch as the number eligible under a quota would be too small to satisfy labor demands and would be rigid and perhaps unfair. It would probably not be passed by Congress. But as we want restriction and Mexico also wants it, we believe a joint commission could arrive at a workable solution satisfactory to the major interests on both sides.

(d) Our people should realize the Mexican is here to stay and must be accepted. The Mexican is on both sides of the international boundary and the problem is more than local. We watch with deep interest and approval the working out of the new arrangement by which the So. Calif. Conference working with Mexicans in its own territory also handles the missionary work of the American Board in the West Coast of Mexico field.

As we must deal with the Mexican for better or worse, we urge our people and our churches to cultivate friendly relations with these people in every possible way. Let us learn to appreciate their good qualities, get their point of view, sympathize with their progress, study their arts and crafts and see what they can contribute to us, as well as what we can do for them. Efforts at understanding, like Mr. Herring's summer seminars to Mexico, should be shared as widely as possible.

Classes in Inter-racial relations are being carried on in many places. We urge a wide increase of such classes, with particular relation to Negroes and Mexicans.

(e) The A. M. A. might well devote more attention to the task of educating public opinion in the right attitude toward Race Relations, as well as in administering its admirable institutions, and in publicity aimed at financial support for the same. The A.M.A. is our largest group working for right Inter-racial relations, with ample force and large budget. Could it not well render excellent service in special educational work for racial understanding of the under-privileged races for which it works?

The Indian Situation

The Indian problem in America is one that deserves the most careful consideration of our people. There is no question but what there has been an increasing amount of study given the problem during the last few years. There has been developed voluminous literature. The Institute for Government Research has issued an eight hundred page study of phases of the problem by the experts of that institution. There have been hearings before committees of Congress; editorials and news articles in our newspapers and leading magazines; and there are on all sides evidences that there is a wide spread interest in the present situation, and a growing desire that if conditions are not as they should be, some progress ought to be made toward improvement.

In these various studies it has been pointed out that to gain a point of view of the situation as it exists we should study not only our own cumbrous attempts, but likewise that we should make a study of the program as it has been developed in Canada. It is said that the Canadian system recognizes the necessity of better pay for the administrators. It does not seek to make white men out of the Indians overnight. It depends on specialists who are outside of politics. It is based on constant consideration for the Indians' needs rather than for the white men's convenience. Such a system may not be completely adaptable to our own case. But its study in connection with framing legislation for the reorganization of the Indian service could not but be helpful.

The main question which lies back of the whole discussion is that of principle. What policies shall guide in the administration of Indian Affairs?

Several "schools of thought" have developed. On the one hand are those who maintain that the Indians must be "de-Indianized." The Commission is not in sympathy with the approbrium attached to this term. That is, that they shall be made over on the pattern of the white man, for only so can they compete with white men in the white man's country. To do this, they must be given the white man's education and become integrated with the white man's civilization; and that in the end the Indians as a separate people shall cease to have their distinct existence and become amalgamated, culturally, if not racially.

On the other hand, there are those who believe that if the Indians become "civilized," it is but another name for extinction. This school holds that it is impossible to adjust a primitive people to a highly complex modern civilization. They contend that in the process the Indian's morale is broken; that the white man's efforts to iradicate the Indian's religion, strikes at the root of his being; that contact with white men has introduced vices and diseases; that the white man's school system has made the Indian dissatisfied without preparing him for life as he must live it. The groups demand in the name of the Indians, the right to choose the form of life which they will lead within their reservations.

It is not within the province of this Commission to measure or to differentiate the controversies that have raged and are raging in Government and professional circles. Suffice it to say that the Indian finds himself in a difficult transition period. He cannot go back to the old trails. The carefree, communal life of the past is gone forever. The buffalo cannot be brought back to the plains nor the great North woods reforested and the cities of the plains laid waste. He is in the midst of the white man's civilization and needs as never before, wise and sympathetic guides to show him the way. He finds the new trail dim and uncertain at times, but having set his hand to the plow he cannot turn back. Gradual assimilation into our body politic is the goal, distant, it is true, with respect to certain tribes, but nevertheless inevitable. This Commission believes that this can be a benevolent assimilation.

Holding this belief the Commission has no sympathy with the "let-alone policy" of the sentimentalists who raise the cry: "Let the Indian alone. Don't educate him. That makes him common like the rest of us. Let us make of him a museum piece, etc."

As far as the Government's administration of Indian affairs is concerned it goes without saying that in every great institution there are unfortunate instances and unworthy people. The Indian Service is no exception, and where such conditions exist it is prima facie evidence of the need of most thorough going investigation and study. On the other hand, one should not lose sight of the fact that in the personnel of the Indian Service (5,000 distributed among 109 Agencies in close contact with the Indians of some twenty-four states) there are large numbers actuated by purely missionary motives. Moreover, fully one-third of these employees are Indians working among their own people.

The Indian Rights Association which has done yeomen service in behalf of the Indians for years speaking of the present agitation says:

"We here do hope that much good will come to the Indians and their cause through all the agitation being conducted through the press. We do feel that publicity will go far towards correcting the evils, though we deplore the gross exaggerations of the evils of the boarding schools and all government administration. We know that much that is being published in the press is true, but we also know that much is not true. Our local Indians have suffered as much from what has been done for them as from what has not, and much of their idleness is directly traceable to much being done for them that they should have done for themselves. I believe extreme paternalism is worse than indifference."

This Commission endorses in the main the report of the Federal Council on the Indian situation as presented in the October 27th, 1928, issue of "Information Service." (This is based on the findings of the Institute for Government Research as published in "The Problem of Indian Administration." It is only fair to say that this study was made over two years ago and that many changes and improvements have since been made correcting conditions.) From this report the following quotations are taken:

General Policy

"The survey staff considers that 'the object of work with or for the Indians is to fit them either to merge into the social and economic life of the prevailing civilization, as developed by the whites or to live in the presence of that civilization at least in accordance with a minimum standard of health and decency.' Therefore the whole problem is 'Fundamentally educational.' In all the work of the Indian Service 'The primary question should be, how is the Indian to be trained so that he will do this for himself.'

Organization and Personnel Problems.

"Until recently the Indian Service has been highly centralized. A uniform course of study for all Indian schools is prescribed from Washington. Yet the different jurisdictions vary so widely that a distinctive program is recommended, fitted to the special needs of each jurisdiction, with increased authority and responsibility of agency and school superintendents.

Health

"The inadequate records available show that there are more than twice as many deaths per 1,000 of population among the Indians as among the general population. The Indian tuberculosis death rate is 6.3, as compared with 0.87 for the United States registration area. In Arizona alone it is 15.1—higher than the rate for all causes in the general population of the registration area. Yet the records are so incomplete that but little can be judged from them. A diagnosis of tuberculosis is seldom made until cases are too advanced for cure. 'Diagnostic facilities, such as X-ray and laboratory and tuberculin tests, have not been available in the Service, and it is only on rare occasions that such aid is sought from the outside.' In the boarding schools the prevalence of tuberculosis is 'alarming,' due, apparently to the failure to make complete health examinations, to the serious overcrowding practiced, the poorly balanced ration, and the industrial method of operating these schools.

"At one school a tubercular patient, recently discharged from the school hospital was found by the survey staff 'repairing steam pipes in a wet and poorly ventilated room.' The school authorities had ignored the physician's orders. In another, children reporting to the dispensary for 'eyes' were all treated for trachoma though many really needed refraction.

Education

"A change in point of view is 'the most fundamental need in Indian education.' Boarding schools are operated on a basis 'below any reasonable standard of health and decency.' A real program of adult education is much needed. The report urges that the Indians be taught how to farm, that a campaign be carried on to eliminate illiteracy among them and that they be taught independence and reliance upon their own efforts. There is ample evidence that Indian children are well able to handle school work.

"The present course of study for Indian schools was originally prepared in 1915 and is now 'very much in need of revision.' The boarding schools are organized on a half-time plan with half the school day devoted to academic subjects and half to industrial work. Of this scheme the survey staff says: 'The labor of children as carried on in Indian boarding schools would, it is believed, constitute a violation of child labor laws in most states.'

"Very little directly vocational work is done. In most Indian schools the only system in physical training is 'a scheme of military drilling that is largely obsolete even in Army training camps.' . . .

"Community organization of social life for Indians is much needed, since nothing has been substituted in place of the old tribal organization. 'Most superintendents of reservations and agency employees generally do not understand the fundamental educational principle that the Indian must learn to do things for himself, even if he makes mistakes in the effort.'

"Bad economic conditions are general, even in tribes with large potential resources. Such statistics as are available show that the annual per capita Indian income, tribal and individual, for 97.8 per cent of the Indians is less than $500; for 71.4 per cent it is less than $200. This figure does not include the value of certain wild products with little or no commercial value. Individual income is even lower; 83.9 per cent have a per capita individual income of less than $200. The report states that 'the standard of living is often almost unbelievably low. Almost nothing is spent for shelter and firewood, and very little for clothing and food. Many homes were visited where there was almost no food on hand. The homes where a reserve of food had been accumulated were the exception. Many Indians are just above the famine level, and if anything goes wrong they must go without, or fall back upon government rations.' . . .

Family and Community Life

"Indian homes vary widely, but, in general, the Indians still live 'in primitive dwellings, in tents, and shacks, and in small houses poorly constructed, ill kept and in bad repair.' The food supply is frequently inadequate and very restricted in variety. The government ration where it is depended upon 'is never satisfactory with respect to food balance and seldom with respect to quantity.' Dwellings are badly over-crowded.

"Indian family relations have suffered through contact with whites because most inter-racial contacts are with whites with low standards. The policy of educating the children in boarding schools has had a bad effect on both parents and children. 'Evidences are not lacking that many tribes' are today less industrious, less able to fit themselves to their environment than they were fifty years ago; that they were in some ways better off in their primitive state. In so far as the government has sacrificed real and vital adult education to the formal education of children in institutions it has handicapped a primitive people in their development, and the Indians have little to show. The loss of children tends still further to disrupt the family through the loosening of marital ties.'

Legal Problems

"The legal organization of the Indian Service is very inadequate. Legal difficulties are usually presented by the Indians to the reservation superintendent, and then, by him, to the Indian Office. Delays are frequent, and long-drawn-out. Another serious difficulty is the fact that the United States Attorneys are frequently not in sympathy with the theory of government protection for the Indians and are unwilling to prosecute the cases which are turned over to them.

Missionary Activities

"The outstanding need in missionary activities is cooperation between the government and the missionaries and between the different denominations working in the field. It also recommends the creation of 'a national advisory council composed of representatives of each of the churches engaged in mission work among the Indians.' The Indians are 'a deeply religious people' and it is urged that much more consideration should be given the native Indian religions, ethics and forms of worship. Denominational rivalries present the same serious problems in work for the Indians as elsewhere. Some of the missionary activities the survey staff considers are 'of an extremely high order,' particularly some of the schools. But, it believes, missionary work should be restricted to 'work that can be adequately supported and for which high standards of personnel can be maintained.' The work of the missionaries, like that of the government, has had but little effect on home and family life of the Indians. It seems that 'the missionaries have placed their main reliance for reaching the adult Indian upon the traditional church activities, conducted in much the same way as are activities for white church members.' The survey staff believes that 'The Protestant missions could, without sacrificing the advantages of individual effort and local control, achieve certain obvious advantages of organization, by pooling their interest in some inter-denominational committee for Indian work similar to the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America.' "

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Indians not a Homogeneous People

This Commission feels that it is well to recognize that Indians are not a homogeneous people. With 200 tribes or remnants of tribes, speaking almost as many languages and dialects, and scattered on 161 different reservations in twenty-four states of the Union, conditions vary—economic, social and cultural conditions vary and often to a marked degree. The "Indian" is in many respects as much of a composite as the Anglo-Saxon.

Racial Backgrounds

To take into account the Indian's racial background and to give adequate recognition to the fact that America's aboriginals are a "peculiar people," peculiar in the sense that they are Indians and not Anglo-Saxons, is undeniably a point of view which should figure prominently in any race study. In order to understand the Indian of today one must look into the soul of the Indian of yesterday. In approaching a social and community program for these people it is well to bear in mind certain racial characteristics common to the Indian. He is reserved in the presence of strangers, unwilling to reveal his real feelings; also a deep-rooted conservatism, holding fast to old customs and traditions. Of more positive import are the racial traits which should be conserved, such as self-respect, self-control, endurance, courage, loyalty, hospitality, generosity, sociality, capacity for friendship, reverence and the religious impulse.

Cooperation of Indian a Factor

In any program of "race uplift" the cooperation of "the one to be uplifted" is a most important factor. Commenting on this a recent report of the U. S. Board of Indian Commissioners says: "You can lead or drag an Indian to school but that does not mean that you can make him think, or make him self-reliant or able to take care of himself." One is reminded of the College President's statement with regard to the attitude of the average student: "Educate me if you can." Some Indians are responsive and want to learn the white man's way, others are not. Indians must learn to cooperate as white people do. This is not learned in a day. It calls for wise adaptability, great patience and a vivid sense of ultimate achievement on the part of those entrusted with these tasks.

Occupational Opportunities

As the Indian needs to learn cooperation so also does he need to know how to organize his abilities toward constructive work in a workaday world. Work will be his salvation while idleness will continue to be his curse. Occupational opportunities for Indians off as well as on the reservations are therefore needed. Your Commission believes that the Government could perform a much needed service by providing employment and placement agencies, especially in following up returned students from the schools.

The Educational Approach

Your Commission believes that many of the Indian schools and other agencies are conducted on a very high plane. In some cases more efficiently and with better equipment than is provided for the whites in the immediate neighborhood. On the other hand, many of the facilities are totally inadequate. But leaving all these matters of detail to be studied by the experts, your Commission holds that the whole theory of segregation of children from parents and from their own communities during their early childhood and adolescence is wrong in principle and a failure in practical operation. Such a process violates two fundamental human needs. First, the need of the child for the emotional life of affection which association with parents is expected to provide; and in the second place it deprives the parents of the opportunity of manifesting their affection and care of their own offspring. That is, to separate a child from the parent, and to deprive the parent of any responsibility whatever for the food, clothing, education and health of the offspring from the sixth to the fourteenth year, creates unnatural attributes of character in both parent and child. In saying this we are not unmindful of the need of maintaining boarding schools among certain tribes for many years to come (for example, the Navajoes); also providing boarding homes for orphan children and certain specialized training schools of secondary grades (for example, vocational and industrial, etc.).

It is the judgment of your Commission that the children of the tribe should be educated, as far as possible by the members of their own race who have had the advantages of education, and that this should take place in the environment and with the cooperation of the parents. Such local schools to be financed by the Government, supervised by sympathetic whites and educated Indians, the courses provided to stress as the main idea, practical usefulness, and the teachers to be as far as possible members of the Indian community who have had special training for this work. It is to be understood that there are many disadvantages and real problems connected with this proposal, but if the whole life of the Indian community is to be lifted, it seems to your Commission that this is the way of advance.

It might be well, in order to test out this theory, to establish one or two "demonstration centers." In the more backward communities these schools might very well provide for "opportunity classes" for the retarded and the adults.

In any educational approach the school's task, as some one has put it, should be "the changing of a way of living rather than the carrying out of a routine of academic studies." Standards of regularity and order, vocational training and furnishing an opportunity for work should be vital factors.

It is the sense of this Commission that the Indian children should be enrolled in the public schools of their respective communities as soon as they are ready for this change. In some instances the process of assimilation has gone far enough to admit of this step. It is the goal toward which the Government in cooperation with the respective states having Indian population will steadily work.

Cooperation of Government and Christian Agencies

Possibilities of this sort of cooperation have already been touched upon in the paragraph on Missionary Activities. However, the Commission wishes to stress the following additional points, in keeping with the general spirit of that paragraph:

1. The churches could very well promote a campaign of education on the Indian problem, disseminating information through church publications, lectures, etc., centering on the history, traditions, customs, community and social life of the Indians. Every citizen should realize that he is a co-guardian and co-trustee with the Government in all its dealings with the American Indians.

2. For the purpose of improving family and social life community centers are needed. The churches have the opportunity, if they will, to establish such demonstration points, thus helping to develop the civic spirit as well as every phase of social life. The Government heartily welcomes such cooperation.

3. Leadership training and student scholarships. The desirability of raising up, training and using a native leadership has long been felt by missionary agencies. Even in the recent report of the Interior Department Committee on "The Problem of Indian Administration" this is stated: "Your Committee wants to emphasize the desirability of training native workers in the missionary activities, as such workers have a great advantage in being able to reach their tribesmen in their own language. A high grade of work in mission schools will contribute to that end."

Not only mission workers but all potential leaders should be adequately trained. It is therefore recommended that the churches seek to provide scholarship funds for deserving students who wish to go on to college. Something has already been done in this regard but much more remains to be done. The Government can also help. A revolving fund should be requested from Congress to make available scholarship funds on some sort of refunding basis.

Gradual Release from Wardship

Your Commission quotes herewith a paragraph from the Interior Department Committee's report, referred to above, and with this it is in full agreement: "It is the opinion of your Committee that the time has arrived when some very definite plan should be made looking to actually severing the Government guardianship of many of the Indians and placing them upon their own full responsibility as citizens of the State. A great deal has been said for years about 'turning the Indian loose,' but indifferent progress has been made. This should be an individual matter. No tribe in its entirety would be ready for the step at the same time, but there should be a way by which an Indian who has had the educational opportunity and who should be placed entirely upon his own responsibility, can be given whatever belongs to him of tribal estate and informed that he is no longer under the supervision of the Government nor has any voice in tribal matters; that being a full fledged citizen, with the privileges and obligations of such citizenship, he need no longer look to the Federal Government for assistance. Additional legislation is necessary before this can be fully accomplished."

We recommend that this Council approve the above conclusions and recommendations, and that the Executive Committee of the National Council, in cooperation with this Commission be instructed to bring these recommendations to the attentions of the Indian Bureau, the Committees on Indian Affairs in the House and Senate, and to the President of the United States.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NEAR EAST RELIEF

This report of your Committee on Near East Relief has special significance because Near East Relief is facing the end of its task. On June 30th campaigning will cease, although the work must go on overseas for two more years.

Your Committee would record its firm conviction that no element of the Christian work of our Church during the past year and during the preceding decade has been more rewarding than that which we have helped to do through Near East Relief; that no money we have spent has been better used; that no record made in the sight of Christians and non-Christians alike has been more effective. Near East Relief has increased the missionary interest of the Congregational churches in a way to make us glad that we were sharing in such an effort, which successfully transcends race and creed. It has joined our hands with those of many brothers in doing the will of the Master of us all.

We acknowledge with deep appreciation the way in which our church leaders and members have carried forward this great task; and we may well unite in expressing our gratitude to Near East Relief and pledging our loyal support in helping to finish the program in which we share.

We have not only saved lives but we have built Life. Diseased children have been made well and gone out from our shelter and spread a new gospel of cleanliness and health. A definite program of religious education and character-building has resulted in new ideas of integrity, trustworthiness, and industry: ideals which the children are carrying from the orphanages into their new homes in cities and villages. Standards of work are improving. Artisans, farmers, nurses, workers of all sorts, still in their teens, fit themselves into normal economic life and press ahead with ambition, vision and trained ability. A frontal attack is in progress on racial and religious intolerance and hatred as children who have learned to sing "Faith of our Fathers, we will love both friend and foe," prove themselves good neighbors wherever they settle. And much of what American help has accomplished has been possible because the children are striving to be worthy of the faith for which their parents died and to prove their gratitude for our gift of life—gratitude that can only be expressed in lives well lived.

That is the accomplishment, hardly more than begun, the seed that will grow throughout the coming years. Now the immediate task is to finish our share of it. On January 4th members of Near East Relief's Advisory Committees met with the Trustees and voted their approval of the raising of a final $2,000,000 by June 30th. This amount is the minimum budget that will give essential care to every boy and girl for whom Near East Relief is still responsible.

After June 30th pledges will be collected and the balance of the overseas program carried to completion by a Conservation Committee composed of a small group of workers best fitted for these tasks. But in the meantime we face the fact that only a few weeks remain for appeals to be made. We trust that a gift for this year and a pledge for 1930 may be made by every contributor, church, and Sunday School.

Your Committee makes two recommendations:

- (1) That a small advisory committee be continued to co-operate with Near East Relief Conservation Committee.
- (2) That our people make an extra effort before June 30th to share fully in bringing this remarkable piece of Christian service to victory so the children shall not suffer through our neglect and so that in this as in our other forms of service we shall merit the Master's "Well done!"

COMMISSION ON RECRUITING

Your Commission on Recruiting has held many meetings. It has conducted a voluminous correspondence between its members and with many others whose wisdom has been sought. Through its chairman it has held a number of significant conferences with such bodies as the Executive Committee of the National Council, the State Superintendents, representatives of the Education Society, presidents of educational institutions associated with Congregationalism, many pastors, and with a large number of young people both in college and in the seminary. This report, therefore, represents prolonged and nation-wide study of the matter committed by the Council to the Commission.

The Data

There is much uncertainty concerning the fundamental facts affecting the whole matter of ministerial supply. We have therefore undertaken a painstaking and, we believe, accurate study to learn (1) how many ministers are needed for the proper carrying forward of our work, (2) the number and character of the ministers now enrolled, (3) a projection as to the probable future supply, and (4) the cost of training. In the study of these items numerous subsidiary matters have appeared which bear upon our problem.

The statistical studies involved have relied primarily upon the data of the Congregational Year Book and the reports of the Federal Census. Matters of budget, expense of preparation, etc., are derived chiefly from a study of the student body at the Pacific School of Religion.

In order to present these important data in a form easily apprehended we are submitting herewith several graphs which quickly tell their own story.

Figure 1 presents on the same sheet (A) a curve showing the increase of population of the United States from 1895 to 1925. This must be a basal figure for all our studies inasmuch as the obligations of the ministry and of the church is to the people.

On the same sheet (B) we show the membership of the Congregational churches in America for the same period. This tells us that our membership has increased from 602,000 to 901,000. The line is severely dented during the period of the World War. This dent was not due to physical but to moral causes, for the total population shows no appreciable change because of the War. The significant thing about the membership line is that it does not run parallel to the population line. In growth our churches are not keeping up their share in the total population. Many reasons are offered for this lag and probably it is due to a number of causes, but some are venturing to guess that the ministry is now, as it has always been, the chief factor in the growth of the churches.

The third line (C) in figure 1 shows the number of ministers, both pastors and others, who have Congregational standing. This number increased approximately parallel to membership up to about 20 years ago. A marked slackening occurred at that time, and 15 years ago the course of the line was reversed and we have fewer ministers at every five year interval since. We now have only 163 more ministers than we had 30 years ago and there are 523 fewer now than there were 15 years ago. This falling line of the ministry lying beside this rising line of population and the less steeply rising line of church membership constitutes the problem before the Council.

Figure 2 places side by side the curve for the churches, for the ministers of all functions, and for the pastors. It appears that the curve for ministers runs rather closely parallel with that for churches until 1910. Since that time, while the churches have decreased heavily, the ordained ministers have decreased still more.

The line for pastors is the more significant one in comparison with the curve for churches. It appears that the maximum number of pastors came about 8 years before the maximum number of churches and that from that date on the pastors have decreased much more rapidly than the churches. This, of course, indicates a corresponding increase in the number of pastorless churches. The big gap is eased a little by the yoking of small churches so that the gross disparity is not quite as great as would appear. Nevertheless it remains that 30 years ago we had 1,894 fewer pastors than we had churches, whereas today we have 2,392 fewer pastors. The disparity has increased by about 500.

There are some very important deductions to be shown by this curve. (1) As Congregationalists we are now thinking of "livings" rather than of the field. This arrangement is probably desirable from the point of view of the minister, but it is doubtful whether it is most effective for the propagation of the Gospel. A number of new denominations have appeared within recent years and they are forging ahead rapidly in churches and membership. Someone has suggested that these newer denominations have not yet created vested interests in the ecclesiastical sense and that thus their ministry conceives of the entire population as the field of work for them. (2) Types of ministerial service have greatly increased within a generation. This in large measure accounts for the wide gap between pastors and ministers as a total, and this gap may normally be expected to increase as the diversification in the idealistic vocations also increases. The gap between ministers and pastors contains a surprisingly small number of ministers who have gone into business—actually only 135 out of 2,392 who are not pastors.

The number of ministers available for the pastorate consists of the total number of ministers less those who are counted under a number of very important heads, chief among which may be mentioned: foreign missionaries; secretaries; superintendents; denominational executives; authors and editors; administrators and teachers in educational institutions; interdenominational workers, for example, those with the Federal Council, Bible Society, etc.; chaplains; evangelists; social workers; serving other than Congregational churches; incapacitated on account of illness, etc.; supernaturated business and professional.

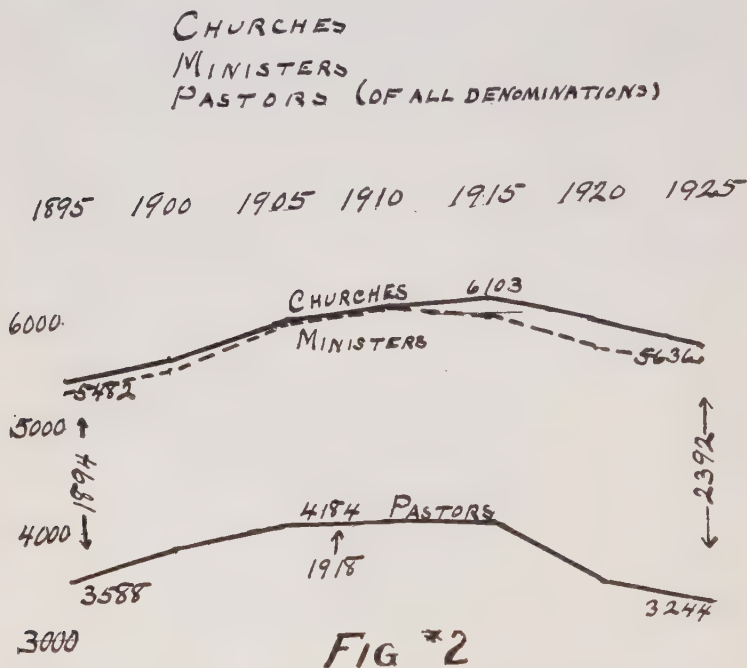

Inasmuch as all these claims will continue to be exercised as demands upon our ministry it is certain that there will always, therefore, be a large gap between the number who are enrolled as ordained and the number who are listed as pastors. We see no reason to suppose that these two lines will appreciably come closer together. They may spread still further.

The fact that there are so many more ministers than there are pastors has often been read as though there were a couple of thousand jobless ministers looking eagerly for every pastoral opening. Our studies show that this is not at all the case and the long list which has just been recited serves to indicate why this is so.

It is a fact that a large number of men appear at once as available for any important vacancy occurring in the pastorate. This, however, does not give evidence that there is an over-supply of men, but rather that many men are eager to move. Your committee has checked carefully with a number of pulpit committees which have been recently in search of pastors, and it appears that there are very few men indeed whose names come to such committees who are without pastoral positions or other types of work definitely suitable for ministers. There are, in fact, a great many more vacant churches than there are unemployed ministers.

If the curve of church membership is projected to the year 1940 it shows that at the present rate we should then have 1,200,000 communicants. If the curve of pastors is also projected to 1940 it shows 2,500 pastors available to care for these members, or about 480 communicant members for every pastor. We are not asserting that this trend will continue for another 15 years as the lines of the chart prophecy. Doubtless there are several other factors entering into the equation, but on the evidence of the present ratio this seems to be the outcome within a half generation.

Another very significant thing resulting from the study of the curves of population, ministers, and pastors is the obvious fact that the Congregational churches are not getting their fair share of the youth who are preparing for leadership in the years to come, and we are certainly getting a much smaller part of the educated youth than we were able to call so recently as one generation ago. These lines concur with the statement often made that the proportion of boys in college looking forward to the Christian ministry is growing steadily less and less. This is confirmed by studies made by the Council of Church Boards of Education which show that the proportion preparing for the ministry, in comparison with those preparing for other professions, is suffering a serious downward trend. This will probably reflect itself in the years immediately ahead of us by a still further lag in the church membership line in comparison with the line indicating increase of population.

A chief reason for the lowering proportion of young men for the ministry is due to the competition of other forms of valuable service which are more numerous, better organized, and more insistent in their appeals toward the best youth than was the case when the men now in the prime of their ministerial life were back in college.

Figure 3 presents side by side the record of ordinations compared with the record of deaths. The Year Book began these reports in 1901. We thus have 25 years of careful statistics.

Inasmuch as ordinations vary considerably from year to year, as also do deaths, both data were assembled in five year periods and averaged. This makes a much smoother curve and more accurately tells the story. The first 5-year period shows an average of 146 ordained. The last 5-year period shows an average of only 91. Thus 25 years ago we ordained half as many more ministers per annum as we have during the last 5 years. The decline began long before the World War.

Deaths, on the other hand, rose from 101 to 130. This line will steadily rise for the next 20 years, but as it is we are now burying about 45 per cent more ordained men than we are annually inducting into the ministry.

The age at death has been very carefully recorded for over 50 years and it reveals that our men die on the average at almost exactly 73 years of age. We are not equally well informed, however, regarding the age of ordination, but counting back over all those ordained as reported in the last Year Book we find that the average age was 36 years. This gives an average period of service of 37 years, which corresponds very closely to the figure reported in the Year Book as covering the record of the past 50 years. Thus men are ordained, on the average, at 36 years of age, they serve 37 years, and they die at 73 years. The Annuity Fund shows that the average age of retirement from active service precedes death by about 5 years, coming thus at approximately the age of 68.

It thus appears that men who were ordained on or before the year 1900 will serve as a group not to exceed the year 1937, i.e. 8 years from the time of the meeting of the Council at which this report is submitted. These men number, according to the last Year Book published, 3,404 and to terminate their service by 1937 they should retire at the rate of 340 per year, beginning with 1927.

If we carry our tables on to 1950 the same method of computation will show that we should have 1,200 still living out of our over 6,000 ministers reported in 1927.

These are figures for our total ministry. The same reckoning applied to ministers serving as pastors shows that 2,225 will go finally out of service by 1937, leaving only about 1,600 of those who were reported in the Year Book of 1927.

There seems to be no escape from the havoc wrought by superannuation and death. The only remedy nature provides is the birth rate. Certainly we cannot expect to lengthen the life of our ministers by any great amount since they already live to an average age of fully 73 years.

Our present ministerial birth rate, namely the rate of ordination, is found to be running something less than 100 per annum, actually 91 during the last 5-year period. If this is continued to 1937, namely 10 years beyond the figures of the last Year Book, we may expect to ordain somewhere between 900 and 1,000 men to take the place of the 3,400 who will die or retire by that time.

Figure 4 presents the age distribution of males of 36 years of age and upward in the total population as shown in the solid curve lettered A. If we were recruiting our ministry to replace those who die the curve for the ministry would coincide with the population curve as both are worked in percentages. It appears at once, however, that between the ages of 36 and 56 our supply of ministers, instead of increasing to match the population, has actually decreased, whereas after 56 years of age we have a corresponding overproportion of ministers.

It is true that the regions located close to theological seminaries have no difficulty in securing young ministers. They have the first choice of the output of the schools, but viewing the nation as a whole we are seriously short of young men inasmuch as the dotted line falls below the solid line for the younger years and we are proportionately over-supplied with older men in just the amount that the dotted line rises above the solid line in the older years.

There is a very interesting actuarial truth which many do not perceive, namely that there is a crisis age in economic activity. For example, it makes very little difference in usefulness whether a man be 35 or 55 years of age, and even up to 65 there is no very sharp consciousness of failure. Thus for 30 years in the ministry a man's usefulness is practically on a level and ministers may be called with safety so far as their current service is concerned anywhere within that age limit, but the next 3 years makes more difference than did the first 30, and the next 8 years makes a difference between a vigorous live man and one who is actually dead. We may prolong the time of retirement for a year or two at best, but the finale of death is inexorable.

For a number of years now we have been travelling on this plateau of usefulness which lies between 35 to 65 years. As a group we seem to be nearer the age of 60 than age 50.

At the present rate 8 or 10 years will carry us as a group to retirement, and 15 years will bring us to the dead line of 73. Insurance people know of no method of escape from this inexorable trend except by the introduction of young life at the other end of the course.

Churches cannot survive without pastors. We must either give up the churches or get the ministers. As to the latter, we must either ordain them or capture them. To capture is much cheaper and much easier, especially when there are many men who are outside of our denomination who are entirely willing to come and dwell with us. It is a fair question, however, whether the economy resulting from the appropriation of ministers from other sources rather than from rearing them from our own body is not offset by very great losses both financially and spiritually. At any rate the figures show that serving as pastors of our churches and in the year 1927 there were 3,000 ministers who had good and regular Congregational standing and there were 956 who did not have Congregational ministerial standing, which means roughly that we have only 3 Congregational ministers serving our churches to one who is not of Congregational standing.

These 956 non-Congregational pastors do not include any who have been reared and ordained in other denominations, but coming to us have been willing to join our associations and wholly cast their lot in with us. Nobody knows how many of the latter there are in our fellowship, but an actual count of the men reported in the Necrology for 1927 shows that 26% of those who died that year came to us from other sources and actually united with Congregational associations. If this percentage applies to the entire number of our ministers it would mean that there are about 1,500 men now enrolled in our associations whose ordination was not at our hands. To this we should add the 956 who are not even yet enrolled with us, which would make approximately 2,450 men who are either pastors or are otherwise in our ministry whose background and training is non-Congregational. This is 43% of the total.

This fact may explain in some measure the perplexity of the Commission on Missions with reference to its program of missionary promotion. While many of those who have come to us from elsewhere are whole-hearted and effective in our common work, it is none the less notorious that a great many have failed to catch a picture of the work which is wider than the particular church in which they are rendering service.

A PASTORS MEMBERS OF ASSOCIATIONS
B PASTORS NOT MEMBERS OF ASSOCIATIONS

It has been found desirable to analyze the group of non-Congregational pastors to discover their present ecclesiastical standing. Remember, these are not men who have joined our Associations but those who, though serving our churches, have not joined us. 186 are Methodists, 107 Presbyterians, 88 Baptists, and other denominations together make a total in excess of 100 more. This does not include licentiates or ministers who claim to be Congregationalists but whose standing is impaired. When we recall the disturbance made in the Presbytery of New York recently regarding the occupancy of one of their pulpits by a Baptist, one may realize how much more conscious some other denominations are with regard to the factors of fellowship.

There are certain other facts pertinent to our study which are not included within these statistical tabulations.

(1) The age of decision for the ministry is generally supposed to occur during the upper years of high school or the lower years of college. The trend is probably toward the high school age.

MEN OF OTHER DENOMINATIONS SERVING AS PASTORS OF CONG'L CHURCHES.

There are heavy losses between the decision for the Christian ministry and actual arrival at ordination. These losses occur chiefly, apparently, in college, though not a few take place in the seminary and a considerable number occur between seminary and ordination. In addition to the ordinary hazards of life these losses are largely accountable to inability to continue preparation for financial or other reasons, to moral break-down or religious disillusionment, to the attraction of other vocations, notably the teaching profession.

There is no way of knowing what the percentage of losses amounts to, but much conference leads some members of the committee to suspect that if one-third of those who set out for the Christian ministry actually arrive at ordination the figure is more favorable than many would believe. It is probable, therefore, that it will be necessary for us to recruit from three to four times as many candidates for the ministry as we expect ultimately to reach that distant goal.

(2) Wide acquaintance with men now in preparation for the ministry convinces your committee that in the matter of quality we are getting very few men of absolutely first rank. Other vocations mark these men and systematically court and win them. On the other hand, we are getting very few tail-enders. The gruelling process of preparing for the ministry rather effectively eliminates such men before they arrive. College requirements are steadily advancing, as are the demands for graduation from seminary, all of which tends to cut down the proportion of distinctly inferior men. A study of seminary records would seem to indicate that in scholarship the seminaries are now largely getting men of B grade, whereas C is the average grade in college.

(3) The cost of preparation for ministerial life is steadily mounting. Not counting the time invested in preparation but reckoning simply the actual cash outlay the candidate must be prepared to meet the charges of four years of college work and three years of the divinity school—seven years in all, and as educational costs run nowadays this represents from $700 to $1,000 per year. On the lower figure, with no allowance for things not absolutely required, by the time a man is through the seminary he has spent at least 5,000 difficult dollars. And the probabilities are he has invested an amount more nearly approaching $7,000. When we consider that practically no candidates for the ministry come from homes of affluence, this means that long before a man is ready for ordination he has spent all the money that he can command, either his own or that provided by the faithful devotion of his family. In the later years of preparation there is some offset against this in that by working heavily overtime industrious men are able to earn small amount in part-time pastoral work or similar endeavors. Also it must be noted that the more important divinity schools in general charge no tuition or room rent and that the cost for food is kept at the lowest figure consistent with adequate sustenance. Even with all of this, however, it is probably true that the cash outlay for college and seminary cannot be put through on much less than $5,000 with the most rigorous economy, while the slightest misfortune on account of health or any of the many risks of life rapidly advances this figure.

The general theory of society is that the investment in preparation for life service is abundantly repaid by the earnings which result from this superior preparation. Inasmuch as the average salary of the Congregational minister is about $2,200, it is obvious that this theory is under a heavy strain. Therefore if we are to hope to secure outstanding men in any number we shall have seriously to reconsider our method of meeting the inescapable expenses of preparation. The Federal Government confronts exactly the same problem with regard to trained men for the Army and Navy. It has found an honorable and workable solution which the Church might well contemplate.

(4) A social revolution is under way among students for professional life. In spite of faculty and all the older people who look with solicitude upon them they insist upon obeying the instinct of nature and the mandate of God and they are getting married before they are through with the prolonged formal training. The experience of one divinity school shows that the married students on the average are maintaining higher scholarship standing than the unmarried. There are also fewer of the moral and emotional problems besetting the married students than are occasionally to be found harassing the unmarried ones. The offset against this, of course, is the anxiety resulting from the increased cost of living when a couple must be provided for on a budget scarcely adequate for a single person. Marriage makes the cost of living in the seminary fully double, especially in those institutions which have no dormitory accommodations for married students. As a denomination we do not advocate a celibate clergy. It appears somewhat embarrassing to us, however, when a ministerial candidate takes us literally at our word.

Selective Recruiting

As already shown, a steadily increasing number of men is needed and we will soon be under the necessity of ordaining or adopting about 300 men per year simply to replace the inevitable losses due to age and death.

The real demand, however, is for a strong advance in the quality of the men to be ordained. Is it too much to ask that about 10% of them should be men who are of the first grade in all points essential for ministerial life? These should be men of the standard sought for such well known appointments as the Rhodes Fellowships or the Fellowships for Religion in Higher Education. At least 25 or 30 such men per year should be inducted into the ministry.

If, however, the loss ratio above indicated applies to this grade it would be necessary to recruit about 100 per year in order finally to deliver the 25 or 30 needed into the actual ministry.

If these men of whom we are now speaking are leaders in the sense we have in mind they will by the sheer power of their personality bring after them, as a wake following their movement, a considerable company of men of good grade of ability, probably fully equal or even surpassing the average of those who now come to us in such relatively small numbers. If in this latter company also the casualties average about what we have estimated above we will need to recruit in all probably from 900 to 1000 prospective ministers per year, or say 75 per month.

Our chief difficulty in reaching this high 10% is the demand which everywhere exists for men of outstanding power. It is well known that a number of the great nationally organized industries are systematically discovering and cultivating just these men. The representatives of these industries do not go to a school and put out a general call for men to prepare for their administrative offices, but rather they confer with those in a position to know and "spot" the very few who are preeminent not only in scholarship but in capacity for human relationships. These men are interviewed privately, the character of the career is carefully depicted to them, its rewards both personal and social are made attractive, and then these men are followed by constant contact right through the period until they are ready to step forth with their formal training completed.

Your committee is convinced that a procedure somewhat similar to this is both appropriate and necessary for the work of the church; that the securing of the recruits whom we so greatly need is not to be prosecuted by a broadcasting process but through immediate personal and intimate solicitation. This might well begin in the relationship between the pastor and the youth of his congregation and continue on through the years of high school and college. Your committee for convenience is designating this process by the term selective recruiting.

We are fully conscious that there are some serious objections to this selective recruiting. First, some will argue that it is "not God's way." It is supposed that there is a prior inward call and allusion is made to the experiences of a number of the Old Testament prophets, of Paul, and of many others. The committee urges, however, that the church is, or should be, the agent of the Holy Spirit and that the call of the Church both to the ministry in general as well as to ministry in a particular field is not only in theory but in fact, as shown by ample experience, a valid expression of the divine will.

A more serious objection is that this method requires extremely high quality in the recruiting agents, and also there should be enough of these recruiting officers to make the necessary contacts. The process is obviously slow and painstaking. It is also expensive for those who are to do this work must be continually at it and they must cover considerable territory. To this should also be added the fact that if we are to hope for these men of exceptional promise we will have to be prepared to meet certain reasonable elements of competition, particularly with reference to the costs of education. If we are to have the benefit of their service we must be prepared to care in a generous way for the cost of their preparation. It may be different in England where the sons of the wealthy are frequently designated for the Church, but in America few who are rich volunteer.

Yet it would seem not to be unduly onerous for us to meet this reasonable charge. We have long ago come to recognize that we do not secure the funds for the ongoing of our benevolences without a substantial expenditure to cultivate the flow of contributions. We are now actually spending from $250,000 to $300,000 per annum year after year, to recruit the funds for the Apportionment. We deem this to be a wise outlay. Evidently the modern age, even in the church, thinks more willingly in terms of money than of men. Your Commission would certainly be judged ready for forcible confinement were we to propose any such rate of expenditure in the recruiting of our leadership. Nevertheless the minister is the real power even in the matter of the Apportionment, and he certainly is the essential person in all the great interests which represent the growth of the Church. This has been true from the time of Jesus down to our own day. The Commission does believe, however, that the expense should not be the controlling factor in the decision of the Council—that instead we should discover our need, develop our plan, and set forth in the firm conviction that if the process of recruiting is appropriate and wise it in time can be shown to be economically abundantly justified.

If we are seeking men of superior quality, the Commission ventures the suggestion that we might as a denomination give further consideration to our methods of ordination and the terms under which we are willing to accept candidates for this high office. It is not a serious over-statement to say that any man who can give evidences of good moral character and who can muster a few active friends can, if he so desires, secure ordination somewhere under Congregational auspices. There is probably no great body in which professional standing is more easily secured than in the Congregational churches. Certainly the lawyer not only has to undergo a rigorous training but he must suffer an examination which results very generally in the discarding of about half of those who offer themselves even after they have had the fullest technical training.

And as for admission to the practice of medicine, the conditions are still more rigorous.

Selective recruiting may then be supposed to require that there must be some agency established (1) competent to discover the men whom we should call; (2) able to present this call persuasively; (3) equipped to direct the recruit toward the preparation for his life work; and (4) able to vouch for his abilities and his training when he appears for ordination.

Recommendations

In the light of the considerations thus presented as a result of the study of the Commission, we are prepared to bring to the National Council the following few, simple and yet we believe fundamentally important, recommendations:

(1) The National Council hereby expresses the judgment that the task of recruiting for the Christian ministry is a matter of vital interest to Congregational churches jointly as well as to the individual church and pastor and that as a Council we seek to find the appropriate procedure to provide for the future such ministerial leadership as may be expected to be adequate both numerically and in the matter of ability and that we commend this viewpoint to the churches, to the associations, to the conferences, and to our educational and benevolent organizations.

(2) We recommend to all interested parties the policy of "selective recruiting" in the sense indicated in the foregoing paragraphs of this report to the end that a sufficient proportion of men of outstanding ability be sought and enlisted, it being understood, however, that this is not for the purpose of causing the abandonment of our present methods, certainly until a much more complete recruiting organization than is likely soon to be created may be put into operation.

(3) The National Council commits to its Executive Committee and the Commission on Recruiting jointly the responsibility of creating a suitable organization to take leadership in the process of recruiting, and notably for the purpose of securing a sufficient number of men of outstanding superior ability. The Council expresses the tentative judgment that this organization or agency might preferably be included within the group of the Congregational Education Society, but that with this should be associated the definite co-operation of the recruiting and the personal officers of both Boards and of the Conferences.

(4) The Council authorizes the Survey Committee to include within the Apportionment provision for a sum sufficient for this agency, the amount to be determined after conference with the Executive Committee of the National Council and the administrative board of the Education Society.

(5) The Council commits to this recruiting agency the task of developing a plan for the adequate care of the recruit during the process of training, especially for those who are secured by our definite selection.

(6) The Commission on Recruiting shall be continued until the foregoing recommendations are securely in operation, particularly for the purpose of further study of the general subject as well as for cooperation with the agencies hereby made responsible for the administration of the task of recruiting.

(7) The Commission recommends to the churches and ministers that all ministers serving Congregational churches whose ministerial standing is other than Congregational be urged to seek membership in their local associations.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON SOCIAL RELATIONS

The Commission on Social Relations, without adequate budget, has nevertheless been able to effectively serve through cooperation with the Social Relations Department of the Education Society. The secretaries of that department have served the Commission in an unofficial capacity, and the closest of cooperative relations have been maintained.

During the past six years the requests for service in this field have multiplied. Our ministers and laymen are profoundly concerned over the part which the Church shall play in announcing and applying the implications of Christianity in the realm of industry, international and racial relations. They believe that the Congregational churches should not be content to occupy any other than advance ground in the movement of social Christianity. We cannot see life steadily and see it whole unless we achieve clear, spiritual vision of the complex forces and facts which make for the good life of all. Your commission, in closest collaboration with the Social Relations Department, has not been content with firing paper bullets at social evils. It has sought to carry the social message of Christianity to churches and associations, suggesting programs of study and action to ministers and leaders of adult and young peoples' groups. It has conducted an active campaign of exposition of the Statement of Social Ideals adopted at Washington. It has sought to dramatize the social and Christian principles underlying the statement through social seminars in strategic centers. Conspicuous among these were the industrial seminars in New York, Boston and Pittsburgh; the racial seminars in Chicago and New York; and smaller conferences in New Bedford and elsewhere. It has cooperated in the carrying on of the Annual Seminar in Mexico, which in three years has grown from an enrollment of twenty to eighty-two, and which this summer will enroll close to two hundred men and women. The cordial relations between the United States and Mexico have been aided, we believe, by these annual visitations from representative citizens of the United States.

In June of 1928, some members of your commission were privileged to help in preparing for the landing of the British Congregational pilgrims at Boston, and in their care during the week of their stay on our soil. The event was a significant adventure in social relations, and is now a cherished memory on both sides of the water.

These are but a few of the activities which the Commission has shared with the Education Society, and were only possible because of the liberal policy of that society in permitting this close cooperation.

Where do we go from here? Six years chairmanship of the commission raises in one's mind the question: Is a program of social education, social exploration and social action—the practical impact of religion on an almost wholly industrialized and mechanized civilization—to occupy a large place in the national program of our Congregational Churches? In some circles there is a manifest tendency to regard such a program as an embarrassing liability, at the most to be tolerated. On the other hand, there are thousands amongst us, ministers and laymen, who believe that the next great forward step for the churches lies in the resolute grappling with this field of endeavor. These believe that a strong program of social action will be the outstanding proof of an overflowing Christian consciousness.

We believe that the present Department of Social Relations of the Education Society should be enlarged and strengthened that it may become in a large sense the “department of social action” for the Congregational Churches of the United States; that through a readjustment in the apportionment, some increase in its budget should be made possible; that this Commission and other Commissions concerned should be increasingly encouraged to work with that department. A truly national program of social action cannot be conducted by the department unless it can add to its staff two or three men and women, expert in their respective fields, nor without a substantial increase in the money available to provide for expense incidental to the organization of social seminars in all of our Congregational centers.

We heartily recommend to the Council the consideration of ways and means whereby this Department may be given additional resources, confident that the greatest need before the Church is adequate and strong leadership in its work of striking out in the difficult and demanding field of social action.

THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON LAW ENFORCEMENT

In rendering an account of our stewardship, the Commission on Law Enforcement would report that it has supplied all of the pastors of Congregational Churches with material for sermons on Prohibition and suggested that they preach a Law Observance Sermon on the anniversary of the enactment of Prohibition.

We cooperated with the other dry agencies in the formulation of an appeal to the Republican and Democratic parties for Presidential candidates, and platforms that would stand for strict enforcement of the 18th Amendment.

In October, 1928, one of our members, Dr. Durkee, was requested to prepare an article on "The Issue," which was printed in "The Congregationalist" on November 1st, 1928.

We formulated and sent out a message that was printed on a poster. This was sent to every pastor with the suggestion that it be posted or read. It was as follows:

"The Commission on Law Enforcement of the National Council of Congregational Churches urges the voters of our churches to prove themselves worthy of citizenship by voting in the national election on Nov. 6. The welfare of our country is determined by those who vote. The privilege to vote has been bought with a great price. To shirk voting is a betrayal of a sacred trust."

The Congregational Churches of America have spoken through their National Council as follows:

"Resolved that the National Council of Congregational Churches commit itself again to the support of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and the Volstead Act, and urge upon all public officials from President to local police neither appeal of the amendment or weakening of the Volstead Act, but a more aggressive and determined effort in their enforcement."

Action taken at Omaha, 1927:

"Churches of all creeds were responsible for the banishment of the saloon. This great moral achievement is now in danger. As a Christian, consider well the moral issues at stake in the coming election, and vote."

In the Presidential election, thirty-six million votes were cast, compared with twenty-nine million in 1924, a gain of 25%. We wish that we might claim that a part of this increase was a result of our appeal to vote. We do believe that the result of the election, and the attitude of our newly elected President, with a marked change in the feelings of the people toward Law Observance, even in the so-called "wet centers," justified our warning that moral issues were at stake.

We, as Congregationalists, did our part in banishing the saloon. If we had remained silent, we would have been faithless to our trust.

Since the election, together with the thirty-eight other dry agencies, we have pledged to President Herbert Hoover our support in his noble attempt to secure better Law Observance.

We are anxious to put through a program of education, giving to the pastors material showing the benefits of Prohibition. Also making available outlines for group discussion. We would call your attention to the material now available for your people's groups.

We are attempting to secure that which may help leaders of men's and women's groups.

We do feel that there is need of a commission like ours to serve as a Bureau of Promotion for material, and to cooperate with other protestant churches in presenting a united front.

The Commission recommends for the study of pastors and Church groups the following:

Davis, "Citizenship Ideals for Christian Youth"; Pickett, "Alcohol and the New Age"; Beman, "Prohibition"; I. C. P. A., "Why Prohibition? Will It Work?"

"Christian Life Problems," Stock, The Pilgrim Press;
"Prohibition, Legal and Illegal," Mc Bain, The Mac Millan Co.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON MEN'S WORK

At the Springfield meeting of the National Council it seemed likely that the organizations known as national men's brotherhoods or clubs were coming to the end of their prominence. Though these organizations served a useful local purpose of acquaintance and information in many cases, yet there was a decreasing demand that we maintain within our denomination a national organization for them with promotional officers and a general budget.

However, the Council was unwilling to take final action until after the matter had been thoroughly canvassed. For this purpose the National Council meeting in Washington reappointed the Commission, placing its headquarters in the Middle West, and instructed it, amongst other things, "to make a special study of distinctly laymen's movements, and report to the next Council whether any type of laymen's movement within our denomination is possible and feasible."

At the time of the next meeting of the National Council, in Omaha, the investigation was not concluded, but the Commission in its report said: "At this time of merger of missionary societies, it does not seem appropriate or desirable to attempt to create a general organization of men's societies, paralleling the women's societies, in the local church."

As the Commission pursued its work, it came to the conclusion that there was great need of securing the participation of men in the work of the National Council itself, as well as the permanent societies of the denomination. Although the Commission had no executive function, by special request it undertook, as test cases, the promotion of the attendance of laymen, first at the meeting of the American Board at Akron in October 1926, and second at the meeting of the National Council at Omaha in May 1927. By these special efforts it was demonstrated that the attendance of laymen over wide areas could be secured. But such promotional efforts do not constitute, in the judgment of the Commission, a sufficient reason for its permanent continuance, staffing and budgeting. The interest of laymen may be aroused and their relationship to the permanent agencies of the denomination can be secured by the established agencies of the denomination and should not require, in our judgment, a permanent, new denominational organization.

The studies which we have made show that in many other denominations similar transitions are taking place. In several denominations the Men's Work has been taken over by the Education Society. In some denominations the distinctively men's work consists of men's Bible Class groups in the churches. The St. Andrew's Brotherhood of the Episcopal Church is the one conspicuous organization of its kind whose success seems to be inherent in the special polity of that denomination.

Scattered over our denominational field there are a number of organized men's groups in the churches. They are of many kinds, with differing objectives, useful entirely for local purposes. Their life depends almost wholly upon local conditions and upon pastoral leadership. To attempt to bring these societies together into a united national men's movement would be an immense undertaking of doubtful significance, even if it could be uniformly accomplished.

It will, therefore, be seen that the Commission definitely proposes in the resolution attached hereto, that the conservation of the men's interests of the denomination shall be committed to the already thoroughly established agencies of Congregationalism. Our Education Society through its Adult Department is equipped to provide materials and inspiration for Men's Bible Classes. No new society should be organized for this purpose. The Department of Social Relations of the Education Society, is prepared to lay out programs which will interest men in the social needs of the community. In this period of consolidation of the women's boards with the general missionary organizations, we do not propose a separate grouping or organization of men for missions. That would be an act of disintegration instead of integration. Responsibility for interesting men in missions devolves upon the missionary boards and the Commission on Missions with their subcommittees and intense activities. No additional permanent organization is needed in the denomination to interest the men of the churches in international affairs, for we have such a commission, quite competent to do so. The Council's Commission on Evangelism and the Devotional Life is quite prepared to supplement the work of the Education Society in its appeal to the spiritual needs of men.

From the standpoint, therefore, of Bible study, evangelism and the devotional life, social service, the world-wide mission of the church, and international relations, the denomination is already well implemented. What needs to be done is that these organizations center their attention upon the problem of interesting, informing and leading the men of the denomination.

Furthermore there should be a continuous effort to maintain and increase the participation of men in our national ecclesiastical and executive affairs. The need for this does not seem to be fully appreciated. Our affairs are predominantly participated in and managed by the honored clergy. The lay participation is nowhere nearly effective enough to give us the highest efficiency and the ablest personnel such as our agencies and causes require. We believe this is a distinct weakness in our situation which the council should be unwilling to ignore.

We recommend that the executive committee of the National Council be instructed to promote the attendance of laymen at the National Council meetings, and that each state and district conference be asked continually to keep before it the problem of integrating the men of the churches in the work of the denomination.

One of the reports made to the Commission by a distinguished administrative officer is of such significance that we quote it here:

"The Council today is overwhelmingly ministerial. In spite of all our exhortations on the subject, no particular improvement is in sight. When our laymen realize that the Council has taken over the control of all our missionary organizations, involving permanent funds and property of probably fifty millions of dollars, they will realize that there is a call for activity on their part." He recommends that we "secure the election and attendance of eminent laymen, men of standing and affairs, who would carry weight and would see that our affairs are conducted in a more business-like way."

For these reasons, and others mentioned in this report, we urge the executive committee of the National Council, the officers of the boards and societies and the state and district officials to promote constructively the use of laymen. Actual results along this line are necessary if the denomination is to rise to its full power and possibilities.

Recommendations

RESOLVED:

1. That an attempt to build up a separate national brotherhood of men in the Congregational Churches of the country be not recommended.
2. That the men's interests of our denomination in national service be promoted primarily by the following agencies:
 - (1) By the Education Society through adult Bible Classes and through the work of the Social Service Commission.
 - (2) By the Commission on Missions and all the missionary agencies, including the Laymen's Advisory Committee, in a special and continuous effort to increase the interest and participation of men in the great missionary work for which we are responsible.
 - (3) By the Commission on Evangelism and the Devotional Life in its plans to meet the special needs of men.
 - (4) By the Commission on International Relations which covers a field of very great interest to men.

3. That the active societies and commissions, with adequate lay representation, be asked to give special attention to the cultivation of the younger men of the churches.
4. That State Conferences and Associations be urged to do all in their power to encourage the attendance of lay delegates at the State and District Conferences, and at the meetings of the National Council.
5. That the executive committee of the National Council be requested to follow up effectively these recommendations and report to the National Council from time to time the progress which is being made. For this purpose the Executive Committee is authorized to appoint a permanent subcommittee of laymen in place of the temporary Men's Work Commission.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON INTERCHURCH RELATIONS

The biennium since June 1, 1927, has witnessed a real advance in the promotion of Christian cooperation and unity. Any such progress is bound to be slow if it is to be steady, yet eventually it may be irresistible. Not alone in North America, but in many parts of the Christian world forward steps have been taken which deserve recognition. These are discussed below. We may well rejoice in these evidences of progress and dedicate ourselves anew to the task of contributing our full share as Congregationalists to a practical realization of our Lord's prayer for the unity of his disciples.

Activities of the Commission

During this period your Commission on Interchurch Relations has been diligent in furthering the important task committed to it, particularly in the promotion of a closer union with the Churches naturally akin to our own.

The Commission organized by mail immediately after the Omaha Council of 1927 by choosing Dr. Frank K. Sanders to serve as its Chairman and Dr. Charles E. Burton to serve as Secretary. This vote enabled much important business to be transacted in anticipation of the first regular meeting of the Commission at Boston, September 19, at which time the informal election was confirmed. The Commission recognized as its principal immediate task the active promotion of comity, understanding and friendship between ourselves and the Christian and Universalist bodies, as approved by the National Council at Omaha.

A second meeting of the Commission was held at Boston, March 5, 1928. The special task before it was the consideration of plans for the important conference of April 25th at Washington, hereafter described. The third meeting of the Commission was held at Boston, October 1, 1928. It studied the report of the Washington and New York conferences, approved their action for substance, gave careful consideration to the plans for merger with the Christians, planned a publicity campaign and voted to hold a fourth and final meeting prior to the meeting of the National Council at Detroit, in May, 1929.

The World's Conference on Faith and Order at Lausanne

At this significant gathering in August, 1927, our Congregational churches were finely represented by a delegation appointed by the Executive Committee of the National Council. This delegation of ten with five alternates was closely associated with groups representing the Congregational Unions of England and Wales, of South Africa and of Australia and New Zealand, as well as the North China Kung Li Hui, some twenty-eight in all. Our delegation was headed by Dr. William E. Barton and included four members of the Commission on Interchurch Relations. It is their profound conviction that the Lausanne Conference, while it may have fallen short of the expectations of some of its advocates, made an important and permanent contribution to the impact of the idea of Christian unity upon the whole Christian world.

Expressions of Christian Unity on the Foreign Field

One of the most wholesome and encouraging phases of the general movement toward Christian unity is to be noted among the national churches now developing on the mission field, particularly in Japan, India and China. The churches which our missionaries have fostered have almost without exception identified themselves with this movement. It has resulted in the sturdy United Church of South India and in the North India United Church. To each of these references were made in our report two years ago. The proposed union of the Anglican Church with the United Church of South India promises to reach a speedy consummation. This movement has especial significance since the conferences at Lausanne and elsewhere have emphasized the fact that the greatest obstacle to Christian unity is in the different conceptions of the Church and the ministry held by strong sacramentarians in some Christian bodies. The solution of this difficulty by the Christians of South India is being watched with profound interest.

Within this period momentous changes have taken place in China. Not only has the National Christian Council come to represent virtually every one of the more than one hundred different Protestant Christian groups but also there have been important unions of their separate sections within the Anglican, Lutheran and Methodist Churches; the Church of Christ in China has been organized, representing already seven groups of Congregational, Presbyterian and Baptist Churches and a constituency of 120,000 communicants, about one-third of the total Protestant Christian community.

These tendencies are strengthened by the general recognition of nationalism in worldwide Christianity in the various Councils which bring together the missionary interests of different countries. It was particularly noteworthy at the recent International Missionary Council at Jerusalem, at which for the first time in history western and oriental Christianity met on an equal basis. Another notable example of this spirit of unity is found in the majority of the large institutions set up by missionaries in foreign areas. In these institutions the spirit of union has almost wholly blotted out denominational control.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Since the Federal Council makes its own independent report to the National Council, your Commission need refer only to several advance steps toward Christian unity which it has recently furthered.

At the National Church Comity Conference held at Cleveland, Ohio, in January, 1928, a five year program of survey and adjustment in the field of interdenominative comity in home missions was proposed by the Home Mission Council, and approved. It is now actually under way with the cooperation of the home mission agencies of the major evangelical denominations, the Federal Council and the Institute of Social and Religious Research. This represents a noteworthy gain in method and objective.

At its Twentieth Anniversary Meeting at Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 5-11, 1928, the Federal Council took three important steps in furtherance of a closer unity than exists at present. It gave much consideration to a new basis of organization which may enable it to be the means of a closer federated unity among the denominations of North America than is now the case. Whether this more complete expression of federal union should be undertaken through some new form of organization or through the Federal Council as now usefully organized for a great variety of purposes is a question for the future to determine.

It also appointed a strong committee to study the scope, function and structure of the Federal Council in view of this possibility, urging that it report its progress frequently to the Executive Committee and eventually prepare a plan to be reported to the next quadrennial conference.

Thirdly, it approved the holding of conferences on extension work for the strengthening and betterment of the existing organizations and their extension to state, city and community councils.

Relations with the Presbyterians

The last National Council at Omaha expressed its sincere approval of the progress of the Cleveland Plan of Union between the Presbyterian churches and our own group in that great city area. It amounted to a very close federation of the two groups of churches. Under it they formed a genuine working unity which has been maintained for a series of years. Last fall, however, the Presbyterians of Cleveland gave notice to the Congregationalists of a severance of this relationship so that it is no longer in operation.

Relations with the Universalists

At Omaha the National Council voted:

"That the National Council approves as its own the joint statement of relationships worked out by the representatives of the Universalist Churches and our own. It believes that the breach of more than five generations should rapidly be forgotten and expresses the hope that the closest practicable union of our separate interests may soon take place. It instructs its Commission, in conference with the Commission on Christian Comity and Unity of the Universalist General Convention, to work out plans to be reported to the next council."

No steps could be taken until after the meeting of the Universalist General Convention held at Hartford, Connecticut, October 20, 1927 at which the Joint Statement was ratified as follows:

1. That we approve the Joint Statement issued by the Commissions representing the National Council of the Congregational Churches and the Universalist General Convention, not only as providing for closer fellowship between the Congregational and Universalist bodies, but as declaring the principles on which a wider unity of liberal Christians may be based. The adoption of this recommendation is to be interpreted in the light of the assertion in the Report of the Commission that nothing in the Joint Statement commits us to organic union.

On November 1st immediately following representatives of our Commission met in New York with those of the Commissions of the Christian and Universalist Churches. At that meeting a definite readiness to consider organic union with the Congregational Churches was expressed by the Commissions of the Christian Churches. Those of the Universalist Church, however, deemed themselves restrained from any discussion of merger by the vote of their Convention, but were eager to do all in their power to promote relations of the closest possible comity.

Farther negotiations regarding the organic unity of the Universalist Churches with our own, however much desired, must await their initiative.

Conferences with other Christian Bodies

Growing out of the resolution adopted at Omaha:

"That the Commission be authorized during the next bienium to do its utmost to draw together into a close federal union not only the two Christian groups with which we are in active conference, but all churches of the Congregational order."

An informal yet quite representative conference was held at the Hotel Hamilton in Washington, D. C., on April 25 and 26, 1928, to which had been invited by letter and in person representatives of some nineteen denominations. The basis of selection was their distinctive democracy in polity and practice. Twelve of these were actually represented by twenty-five delegates and three visitors.

This conference declared that the unity it sought was "a spiritual fellowship on the basis of common experience and central aims that creates for its expression a suitable, visible organization through which it may function," its basis being broad enough to be consistent with a wide diversity of opinion and practice. It urged that that basis be a common purpose to follow Christianity as the way of life set forth in the teachings of Jesus, a broad, simple, readily understood and passionately loyal basis of fellowship. The Conference questioned whether a common Congregationalism was an adequate or more than temporary bond, and expressed a desire to go as far as possible in bringing close together in some practicable way every denomination of every type desirous of promoting unity. In pursuance of this judgment the Conference voted to take steps to call a preliminary conference in early midsummer, inviting thereto representatives not only of the nineteen denominations already on the invitation list, but also of every other Christian body represented in the Federal Council, thus including practically every Christian group likely to be interested. This conference was to determine whether it was desirable and feasible to call a general conference on Christian Unity at some date in 1929.

In pursuance of this vote an invitation was sent to thirty-seven denominational groups to be represented at an informal conference in New York in June. The date chosen proved to be somewhat unfortunate, yet twenty-three of the groups invited were either represented or expressed a genuine interest in what was being done. Four groups definitely declined the invitation; ten made no reply.

This conference met in the Madison Square Hotel, New York City, on June 25, 1928. It was reported through the conference that in addition to the various movements tending toward a merger of very similar groups, such as all the Methodist, Lutheran or Presbyterian bodies, there are five genuine movements for merger in active process at the present time in North America. The very pronounced desire for some forward movement expressed by the May, 1928, Methodist General Conference was also noted. Those present had reason to feel that the general idea of Christian Unity is gaining ground. Being apprised, however, of the plan for the twentieth anniversary meeting in Rochester in December of the Federal Council, which were to include an open and thorough discussion of the most feasible program of Christian unity today, the conference concluded that it ought to await the outcome of that discussion before proposing any further action. It therefore appointed a committee of seven of those of its number who were to be at the Rochester Conference authorizing it to meet at the close of that gathering to make definite recommendations for future action.

This committee met on December 11, 1928, at the Seneca Hotel, Rochester. It reached the conclusion that the cause of church or Christian unity would profit most at this time by the setting up of a conference which would concern itself entirely with the clarification of personal and group thinking on the perplexing questions underlying such unity, a gathering unhampered by denominational or practical considerations, and open-minded, yet thoroughly representative of all shades of opinion and constructive in principle. The hope was expressed that this conference might be held before July, 1929, at some central point, and that it might include not only the thirty-seven groups invited to the New York conference but any other Christian body or useful leader interested in giving thoughtful consideration to the actual promotion of Christian unity. The committee deemed it wise to limit attendance to one hundred or under and to make participation a personal rather than an official matter.

The object of this conference will be a fresh and searching study of the objectives which north American denominationalism should truly cherish in its desire for unity. Your Commission believes that it will serve a salutary purpose at the present time, when Christian unity is defined in such different ways, and therefore has lent its own support.

Merger with the Christians

At the Omaha Council the Commission did not anticipate that the way would open within the biennium for an actual proposal of merger with the Christians, but it was directed to go as far in that direction as practicable. As already indicated when our representatives met on November 1, 1927, with those of the Christian denomination and of the Universalists at New York, we found the former definitely prepared to consider a merger. During the next three months a joint proposal to that effect was worked out and presented for the careful consideration of the two Commissions and to the Executive Committee of the Council. The salient articles of these recommendations relating to the union of the Christian and Congregational churches was as follows:

The undersigned representatives appointed from the Commission on Interchurch Relations of the Congregational Churches and the Commission on Christian Unity of the Christian Church believe that the hour has come when, in the interest of the Kingdom of God and of the larger usefulness of their respective denominations, these two communions should immediately take steps toward an organic union.

We therefore recommend to our respective Commissions, and through them, to the National Council of Congregational Churches and to the General Convention of the Christian Church:

1. That each of them at the earliest possible date take action endorsing an organic union between the Congregational and Christian Churches.

2. That the basis of this new relation shall be the recognition by each group that the other group is constituted of the followers of Jesus Christ. Each individual church and each group of churches shall be free to retain and develop its own form of expression. Finding in the Bible the supreme rule of faith and life but recognizing that there is room for wide differences of opinion among equally good Christians, this union shall be conditioned upon the acceptance of Christianity as primarily a way of life, and not upon uniformity of theological opinion or any uniform practice of ordinances.

3. That the autonomy of each local congregation and the right of each individual member to follow Christ according to his own conscience shall remain undisturbed.

Four additional articles provided for details of procedure which were followed out in developing the plan presented below:

During the spring of 1928 the plan was presented to the state Congregational Conferences, particularly in those states where both churches are well represented. Many of these Conferences definitely expressed their approval of the merger, very few voices indeed being raised in opposition. In consequence plans were perfected for a meeting at Washington September 17-19 of seven representatives of each denomination selected by the Executive Committee of the National Council and by the corresponding committee of the Christians, to formulate a basis on which the merger might take place.

The representatives of the Congregational Churches at this conference were: Charles E. Burton, William K. Cooper, William Horace Day, Edwin Knox Mitchell, Cornelius H. Patton, Lewis T. Reed and Frank K. Sanders. They found themselves confirmed in the desire to make the proposal for merger a reality based on the attitude of the heart and the genuineness of Christian character. The outcome of their mutual deliberations was the first draft of proposals which have since been subject to all sorts of revision.

The Commission submitted this plan for careful consideration to the Commission on Missions, the several Mission Boards, the Executive Committee of the National Council, the Corporation of the National Council, the Commission on Evangelism and to the various State Conferences involved. Further details will be worked out before the meeting of the National Council and in the meantime it should be studied carefully by all members of the National Council and others interested with a view to action at Detroit. The plan is given on the following pages.

PROPOSED PLAN OF UNION OF THE CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

(Revision of March 11, 1929)

I. That the National Council of the Congregational Churches and the General Convention of the Christian Church be united under the title of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches, Unincorporated, both national bodies to continue for the time being their organizations to meet legal requirements, while constituting the membership of the general organization.

That the basis of this new relation shall be the recognition by each group that the other group is constituted of the followers of Jesus Christ. Each individual church and each group of Churches shall be free to retain and develop its own form of expression. Finding in the Bible the supreme rule of faith and life, but recognizing that there is room for wide differences of opinion among equally good Christians, this union shall be conditioned upon the acceptance of Christianity as primarily a way of life, and not upon uniformity of theological opinion or any uniform practice of ordinances.

The purpose of the General Council shall be to perform on behalf of the united churches the various functions heretofore performed by the National Council for the Congregational churches and the General Convention for the Christian churches, it being understood that where technical legal questions may be involved the action of the separate bodies shall be secured.

That the Moderator of the National Council and the President of the General Convention shall be coordinate presiding officers, their service to be arranged by mutual agreement; that for the time being the Secretary of the National Council and the Secretary of the General Convention, while continuing their respective positions, shall be Secretaries of the General Council under such division of responsibility as shall be determined by the General Council or its Executive Committee.

That regular meetings of the General Council be held biennially in the spring or early summer of odd numbered years, and that these be so arranged as that necessary business meetings of the National Council and of the General Convention may be held for legal action and other necessary business.

II. That pending possible mergers the five Regional and the Afro-Christian Conventions, the Congregational "State" Conferences, and after merger the united bodies, be represented in the General Council by two delegates each, and each such Convention or Conference having churches whose aggregate membership is more than ten thousand shall be entitled to elect two additional delegates for each additional ten thousand members or major fraction thereof.

III. That pending merger local Christian conferences and Congregational district associations, and after merger the united bodies, be represented in the General Council on the basis of one delegate for every ten churches or major fraction thereof.

IV. That heads of church colleges and seminaries recognized by the General Council as affiliated with or cooperating with it, or with either communion, the National General Secretaries as defined in the by-laws and editors of national church periodicals, together with the officers of the general national body, be members ex-officiis of the General Council.

V. That in order to conserve legal interests the charter of the General Convention of the Christian Church and that of the Corporation for the National Council of Congregational Churches be continued in force unless and until it becomes possible and seems wise to combine them.

VI. That the voluntary declaration of the representatives of each communion to the effect that they and their work ought not to be a charge on the financial resources of the other be recognized as the general principle to govern in adjustment of financial obligations; that therefore for the time being the miscellaneous expenses of the General Council shall be pro-rated on the basis of the relative membership of the two denominations, and that the expenses incident to continuing any officer, service or missionary enterprise now carried by either denomination, together with present indebtedness, shall be met from the resources of that fellowship. Here, however, the fact is taken into account that there may be natural shiftings of constituency from one denomination to the other, as also changes in the work to be done which will call for corresponding adjustments. It is recognized, however, that where the arrangement at the start is equitable the combined constituency can be trusted faithfully to care for the combined work without fear of discrimination. It is contemplated that during the period of transition savings in overhead expense are not to be expected, but that gradually such savings will result. It is hoped, however, that all will think of such economies as making more kingdom building possible rather than as lessening the challenge to the grace of giving.

VII. That the promotion of income for missionary and educational work be committed to a Commission on Missions of the General Conference consisting of the members of the jointly elected official administrative mission boards (that is, for the Congregational churches, the Prudential Committee of the American Board and the Directors of the Home Board), nine members-at-large (of whom at least one shall be from the Christian constituency) and the two presiding officers and the two Secretaries of the General Council ex-officiis.

VIII. That the functions of the General Council comparable to those now performed by the Executive Committees of the National Council and of the General Convention not otherwise provided for, be committed to an Executive Committee of the General Council composed of the members of the Executive Committee of the National Council (14 members), together with the President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer of the General Convention.

IX. That the functions of the Board of Missions of the Christian Convention in the foreign field and those of the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions be discharged by one body composed of identical members until such time as the constituent corporations may be legally merged.

X. That the functions of the Board of Missions in the home field, the Board of Christian Education and the Board of Publications of the General Convention, and those of the group of societies known as the Congregational Home Boards, be discharged by one body composed of identical members until such time as the constituent corporations may be legally merged.

XI. It is conceived that the provisions of IX and X shall be worked out substantially as follows:

1. Until corporate merger can be effected the Prudential Committee of the American Board and the Department of Foreign Missions of the General Convention shall consist of the same persons, thirty-nine in number and not less than four of whom shall be chosen from the Christian constituency.

2. That the Department of Home Missions, the Board of Christian Education and the Board of Publication of the General Convention, and the Board of Directors of the Congregational Home Boards, shall consist of the same persons, thirty-nine in number, of whom not less than four shall be from the Christian constituency, this Board to appoint four Administrative Committees on the present plan of the Congregational Home Board, on each of which there shall be a total of at least six from the Christian constituency. There shall also be a Foundation for Education of fifteen at least two of whom shall be from the Christian constituency.

3. That Missionary Secretaries shall be appointed by the General Convention in such number as it may deem needful.

4. That the work of the Board of Missions of the Christian Convention in Porto Rico and at Franklinton College be transferred to the Home Board as constituted above, together with the resources for the maintenance of the same.

5. That agreeably with present practice responsibility of the work of home missions and church extension of the Afro-Christian Convention continue with that convention, its successor or successors, on the principle of self-supporting states among the Congregational churches.

XII. That the Christian Convention request the Administrative Committee on Ministerial Relief to further the cause of ministerial relief among the Christian churches with a view to bringing its ministry to a basis similar to that of the Congregational churches and in the hope of ultimate oneness of this work. Further: That whereas the Christian churches now give a certain amount of ministerial aid through local and regional conferences and understanding it to be the desire of the Christian churches to bring about as soon as possible a national organization of ministerial aid, and that the Christian churches will welcome the leadership of the Administrative Committee on Ministerial Relief in perfecting an adequate plan for the aid of their own aged and retired ministers until such time as the merger shall become more nearly complete, and further

That inasmuch as the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers seems to be legally forbidden to admit as members any except "Congregational" ministers, a movement be put on foot among the Christian churches to develop plans under which benefits comparable to those available for Congregational ministers shall be provided for ministers of the Christian churches.

XIII. That of necessity trust funds and moneys given for specific purposes must be administered strictly in accordance with the terms of trusts and the intention of donors so far as expressed. And further.

That until complete unity can be worked out all other moneys contributed by either group of churches shall be administered for the established work of those churches unless otherwise determined by the donors.

XIV. That the present status of educational institutions with reference to their denominational bodies be preserved, and that where mergers of educational institutions are possible they be encouraged.

XV. That the General Council name a commission on evangelism and devotional life to consist of the members of the Commission on Evangelism of the National Council, twenty-four in number, plus three persons chosen from the Christian Church constituency. This commission shall promote a program of evangelism and devotional life in all the churches. With a view to conserving all spiritual values, the Commission on Evangelism of the National Council shall be wholly free to adapt the general program to the needs of the Congregational churches and the representatives of the Christian Church shall be equally free to do likewise for the Christian churches. The work for life service, for which the Board of Evangelism is now responsible in the Christian Church, shall be committed to the Student Life Department of the Home Board.

XVI. The work of the Board of Finance of the Christian Convention in the field of benevolence being committee to the Commission on Missions, its responsibility for the finances of the General Convention itself and its share of the expenses of the General Conference may be retained or committed to the members of the Executive Committee of the General Conference which represents the Christian constituency, as may be determined by the General Convention.

XVII. That the business of publishing be combined as far as possible; that in particular a common Year Book shall be issued in the immediate future on the general tabular scheme of the Congregational Year Book and that in this Year Book for the time being at least all churches be published together for a given state or district, with separate sub-headings in each schedule for the Christian and Congregational churches, or with distinguishing marks as may be determined.

In case the Home Board as constituted above should deem it unwise to administer the Christian Publishing Association Building and printing plant in Dayton, Ohio, the General Convention shall be wholly free to make use of or dispose of this plant as it deems wise.

XVIII. That periodicals be merged as soon as the way is clear and to the extent found desirable. The Herald of Gospel Liberty and the Congregationalist may well be merged, possibly under a wholly new name. If, however, it should seem better to either group to continue indefinitely both periodicals, this may be done without breach of the spirit of unity, financial responsibility being carried by the respective constituencies.

XIX. That the Woman's Mission Board of the General Convention of the Christian Church shall be entirely free to determine its own course of action. The recommendation is strongly made, however, that its activities be applied to the whole program of the Church in cooperation with the Woman's organizations in the Congregational Church.

XX. That the appointment of bureaus and commissions be determined with the view of conserving all the recognized activities of both churches.

XXI. That a similar policy apply to representation in inter-denominational and other bodies.

XXII. That in view of the legal requirements, ministerial ordination and standing be continued separately but with the endeavor to reach common standards as soon as possible.

XXIII. That regional, state and local organizations of each denomination, being wholly self-determining, be free to continue as at present, with full fellowship in the General Council, but that conference with these bodies be had with a view to unification on lines comparable with the proposals for national union.

That in states or districts where the churches of one denomination are very few these might simply unite with the other body, retaining their name locally if desired; likewise that in districts where the number is greater but still relatively quite few these might be united with the other body as a unit, continuing their own name, as for example, the Christian Association of the Massachusetts Congregational Conference, thus retaining their denominational connection while uniting with the Congregationalists but without requiring the organization of a new state body. Likewise, for example, there could be the Congregational Conference in affiliation with the North Carolina Christian Convention or Conference.

Each local church may continue wholly unchanged in name and in organization. Any changes which seem wise may be made by the churches themselves, but it is recommended that the General Council appoint an advisory commission, representative of both the Churches, to assist conferences, associations, conventions and churches on all matters involved in the readjustment of their organization, legal affairs and programs in line with this plan of union, this commission to be empowered to appoint local commissions for such adjustments whenever and wherever occasion may cause and such advice be sought.

XXIV. That the General Convention of the Christian Church and the National Council of Congregational Churches be requested to act on the proposals at the earliest possible date; that so soon as these or other plans are approved by the two Commissions, constitution and by-laws for the General Conference be drawn up, embodying the principles decided upon, these to be offered to the National Council and to the General Convention for consideration.

XXV. In conclusion these plans and recommendations of necessity deal with legal and technical details, but they have their justification in the spirit of unity which they pre-suppose and are designed to promote. If a desire for that unity for which the Master once prayed be the actuating motive of all plans and all acts, the way will become clear, as we proceed, where now it may appear filled with uncertainties, hesitation and hindrance. We may be sure that no legal entanglements will be too difficult, no ecclesiastical customs too deeply fixed, no sentiments seem too precious to yield, no ambitions or personal commitments too intense, if the will to achieve be ours and the Spirit of God lead us. Going forward, thus led, we may ourselves secure, and may make plain to others, the road to joyous fellowship and enlarged usefulness.

COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS FOR THE MINISTRY

At Omaha the National Council appointed a committee "to study means of emphasizing the highest Christian ministerial standards in terms of the present day and to report on means for establishing and maintaining such standards." The following committee was elected: Prof. H. H. Tweedy, Conn.; Prof. Carl S. Patton, Ill.; Rev. Edwin B. Robinson, Mass.; Rev. E. S. Rothrock, Ohio; Rev. L. O. Baird, Wash.; Rev. Wm. E. Collins, Kan.; Mr. Clarence S. Pellet, Ill. Professor Tweedy was unable to serve as chairman and the Executive Committee asked Mr. Robinson to serve.

Never was the demand so great for maintaining the highest possible standards of ministerial training. During the last half century the world of thought has undergone a change of outlook greater in its scope, more transforming in its effect, and more amazing in its possible outcome than that wrought in any other similar period in history. Many of our churches are unconscious of this fact, even though before it the Protestant Reformation pales into a position of comparatively minor importance. Some of our wisest leaders believe that the Christian Church is just entering upon the most crucial battle of its entire existence. One of the most influential ministers in a great educational center tells us that Christianity is being challenged to fight for its very life. Teachers in our universities and leaders in our most cultured communities either doubt or deny the existence of God, the freedom of the will, and the immortality of the soul. One humanist in another fellowship claims that there are scores of churches, once nominally Christian, which now refuse to be thus characterized. They teach openly a message which leaves the throne of God empty and merges the human race and all of its values into a welter of electrons—those infinitesimally minute "particles of nothing moving very swiftly," as one scientist humorously describes them—which is the sum and substance of the inglorious history of mankind. However this may be, there is a real crisis. We are in the midst of a new reformation. This involves very much more than the making of a few changes in our creeds, hymns, rituals and methods of work. The church is faced by the task of a radical re-adjustment to a world of new knowledge which affects its conceptions both of God and of man. In such an age to suffer the leadership of our churches to slip into the hands of ignorant, poorly trained and inefficient men will simply invite catastrophe. A kind heart, a good intention, a pious zeal are all estimable qualities, but they will no more produce an efficient minister than they will an efficient artist, or musician, or scientist, or engineer. Our churches must do everything in their power to maintain the highest possible ministerial standards. Nothing else will empower them to win a victory in the coming age.

As in the case of other professions the best basis for ministerial training is the arts course in a high grade college. This gives cultural breadth, and background and lays an excellent foundation for the professional work in the seminary. The three years in the theological schools is all too short a time in which to cover the studies which belong properly in such graduate departments; and unless the student comes with the requisite preparation in English, literature, history, science, sociology, psychology, philosophy and kindred subjects, he is certain to be handicapped and to fail to receive the best training which the seminary can give. Some excellent institutions have found it necessary to specialize in men who for various reasons have been unable to spend four years in college and their alumni are rendering loyal service in all sorts of fields. It is interesting to note that a large number of the best graduates of these institutions, becoming conscious of a lack in their education, go to the college after the seminary and come out with their A. B. degree. Others who cannot do this proceed to educate themselves by systematic reading, often carried on under supervision in correspondence courses offered by various universities. No one would venture to criticize the work of such ministers. A high grade man self-educated will often render a service to the churches far superior to a man of mediocre ability graduating from the best of seminaries. But this is in spite of his handicap, not on account of it. Normally a religious leader should graduate from the best available college before he turns his steps toward the professional school.

That he should take the full course in a seminary goes without saying. The minister ought to be as fully and as rigorously schooled as the lawyer or the doctor; and if those professions guard their doors against the ignorant and untrained, the ministry may well follow their example.

Surely to meet the present situation no training can be too rigorous and thorough. In the light of it there is good ground for the dissatisfaction felt concerning even the best of modern theological curriculums, and a group of educational leaders are wrestling with the problem of how to make the seminary training more adequate in order to meet the challenge of our times. But whatever changes and improvements may be in store, the finest opportunities now available ought to be utilized, and the largest possible number of candidates for the ministry should be warned against short cuts into their profession and against third and fourth rate institutions functioning in various parts of our land. Some of these will take students who for their own sakes as well as for the welfare of the churches should be kept out of the ministry, give them a pious but utterly inefficient education, and graduate them into hundreds of pulpits, blind guides to the innocent blind who must pay the sorry cost.

As for what the best standards are, the catalogues of any of our leading seminaries will furnish interesting examples. Such a volume as Dr. Robert L. Kelly's "Theological Education in America," a study of one hundred and sixty-one theological schools in the United States and Canada, gives an accurate picture of what is being done. Back of the knowledge of Christianity in particular must be the study of religion in general—its history, its varied formal expressions, its psychology and philosophy. This will be crowned intellectually by a system of theology, developed in the light of all knowledge, scientific as well as religious, and practically by the ability to use this knowledge as preacher, pastor, religious educator, leader of worship, missionary, and student of social reform. Matters which used to be slighted or entirely omitted are coming into their own. The ability not only to know the truth but to teach it effectively, so as to win the allegiance of a hearer; the use of beauty—architecture, painting, sculpture, symbolism, music—in the development of vital worship in what are too often mere "opening exercises," forms through which a congregation moves dully, deadily, even hypocritically, and rites which a modern Amos or Isaiah might well denounce as a mockery of men and an abomination to the Lord; the normal growth of a child in religion, that new world dealt with in the theory, principles, organization, methods and materials of religious education; skilled leadership in the art of living and the cure of souls, that rich field in which the minister may modestly but very effectively work with the psychiatrist, dealing with moods, morbidness, irrational fears, buried complexes, and incipient mental, moral and religious abnormalities,—all this world of spiritual diseases to which he should either minister as a physician of souls or be intelligent enough to recognize and bring the patient into touch with wiser and more skillful specialists in that field—here are tasks for which hosts of ministers have had little if any training whatever and which are receiving an ever-increasing amount of attention in our day.

Congregationalism has always stood for an educated ministry. From the founding of such colleges as Harvard and Yale, which began their work with this goal in view, until now we have held before us the loftiest standards, and never were these more needed than today. Associations and councils in all parts of our land should be warned against lowering them. Churches should be urged to demand the best of trained leadership and to beware of opening their pulpits to superficially attractive speakers who can neither teach the truths nor work the reforms which our age needs. Ministers whose opportunities have been limited should be inspired and helped to make good their deficiencies. It is less the wisdom of its foes than the stupidity and futility of its friends that the Christian Church has most need to fear.

Article 8 of the Standing Rules proclaims high academic standards, but matters of practice clamor for careful consideration.

"Ordination. The standard of the Congregational Churches calls for full theological training as preparatory to ordination. In exceptional cases ordination may be properly conferred upon persons lacking theological training in the schools providing they have successfully completed three years of field study under the auspices of a state conference committee regularly appointed for that purpose, or in correspondence courses with theological seminaries of recognized standing. The Council urges upon the churches the avoidance of any tendency to ordain to the ministry persons who have not received adequate educational preparations or who do not intend to make the Christian ministry in its dignity and integrity their permanent life vocation.

"The National Council recognizes the need of a specialized ministry in the modern church, therefore approves the tendency to ordain to the ministry qualified candidates who specialize in the work of religious education, and who should be recognized and honored as leaders in this development of church work."

Owing to the geographical handicap it has not been possible to hold a meeting of the committee, but supplementing correspondence Professor Tweedy, Secretary Burton and the chairman met and considered the very considerable number of thoughtful letters received from every section of the country, in answer to 150 letters of inquiry, sent out by the chairman.

Many pages could be filled with important excerpts from these letters. It is stimulating for example to learn of the progressive raising of standards in the southeastern section and of the aid in this direction which has come from summer student workers. Then such sentences as the following suggest the tingling vitality of many of the letters. "Successful human relationships in a dual pastorate are perfectly possible but they are a tremendous strain on the human tie. I suppose that is the real reason why the colonial churches gave up the two offices; pastor and teacher." . . . "The only plan I have ever seen help much (when a church has a staff of workers) was for the church to make the tenure of office dependent on the members of the staff dwelling together in unity." . . . "I am growingly of the opinion that women assistants are far more effective in parish work than are men." . . . "It ought to become a settled custom of Councils to decline to ordain men, who have not been previously endorsed for ordination by a State Committee on Ministerial Standing." . . . "About seven years ago the Iowa Conference made the Director of Religious Education the permanent chairman of the granting of licensure by holding a brief service at the time the candidate is notified of the granting of his license." . . . "Splendid Congregational young people are being deprived of opportunities of summer student service by men and women who have no regard for our work." . . . "Ministerial standing would be kept on a higher plane if it were lodged with the State Conference." . . . "The New Jersey Association is preparing a pamphlet for the information of churches calling ministers and of candidates for licensure and ordination." . . . "A member of the State Committee on Ministerial Standing should be included as an invited member of the licensing or ordaining body, the expenses to be cared for by the Conference Account." . . . "I think that the Executive Committee of an Association can well serve as a Dismissal Council." . . . "Few things are more disheartening than the average ordination with its attempts at facetiousness. I have never attended a Congregational ordination, which did not leave me very much dissatisfied with the whole procedure." . . . "Ordination and installation should face the future and become more interdenominational so I would invite in clergy of many denominations, that the candidate may freely pass back and forth thus making for close alliances between churches." . . . "A Cumberland Presbyterian is serving one of our churches and urged his people to give nothing to Congregational benevolences." . . . "We have a clergyman from another denomination. He has served in this city for four years and we have nothing to show that he has ever been ordained." . . . "Men who have grown up in our denomination do better team work with us than do others."

Beyond question there is considerable alarm over the fact that in many cases men can secure ordination from us who cannot or will not meet the demands of the Methodists, who but recently added still another important requirement, the one requiring study at summer conferences. It may be added that in no letter is there a trace of prejudice against women entering the ministry, and some express the opinion that the quality of the women applying for ordination is so high that such candidates have an influence toward raising standards.

Licensure and Ordination

I. Licensure. There are two classes of licentiates, those who are anticipating ordination and those who ask licensure as lay preachers.

(A) Licensure looking to ordination. The committee suggests the following as a possible list of requirements: (1) certificate of membership in a Congregational church; (2) all certificates or diplomas from schools or colleges attended by the candidate; (3) at least two letters of recommendation from ministers who have personally known the candidate; (4) an outline of a sermon or address delivered by the candidate; (5) an oral examination to be made before the Executive Committee, covering (a) knowledge of Congregational history and polity; (b) the candidate's conception of the purpose of the Christian ministry; (c) his religious belief, briefly covering conception of God, Jesus Christ, salvation, the Scriptures and the Church.

(B) The licensure of lay preachers. A limited license usually for one year stating that the holder is not a candidate for the ministry, but commending him as a lay preacher, the requirements to be the same as under (A) except as to (2).

II. Ordination.

(a) The standard for ordination to be vital Christian experience supplemented by college and seminary training, or the equivalent.

(b) Exceptions on the educational standard are called for whenever a council or association is convinced that the candidate is equipped to do worthy work in the ministry and that further educational work should not be insisted upon; at the same time the utmost care should be exercised not carelessly to break down the standard.

(c) Reading courses. Ordination of those who cannot secure college and seminary training should be conditioned on thorough going correspondence or reading courses. These are available:

1. Through seminary correspondence courses, or
2. Reading courses furnished by State Conferences, as for example, that in Iowa.

(d) Practices. The committee suggests that the following be established as the common practice among Congregational churches.

(1) Ordination should be by associations sitting as a council wherever this is possible; (2) associations should maintain competent committees for consultation with candidates and for overseeing courses of preparation; (3) examinations of candidates should be held in advance of the actual ordination, thus making it possible for a council without embarrassment to recommend delay or refusal; (4) association standing should be refused to candidates who have been ordained unworthily, thus affording our churches the protection to which they are entitled on the part of their own associations.

Suggested Topics for Discussion

Do the churches want a ritual for ordination; for installation; printed forms to aid in making reports of ecclesiastical councils; printed lists of questions to be answered by candidates? Should the Year Book give credit to licentiates who are faithfully pursuing definite, supervised courses of preparation? Should religious education workers be ordained unless they have been grounded in general theological training? Is there danger that some training and experience in religious education work shall afford a short cut to ordination? What recognition should be given to religious education workers that have had no general training for the Christian ministry?

What can be done toward helping the local church to realize its duty toward other churches, in its choice of a minister? How can the local church be helped to realize the harm done to the fellowship of the churches when it calls as its pastor a man under considerable suspicion of moral unfitness, and for whom no Association or Conference commendation can be secured? How can delinquent churches be led to accept higher standards for the Christian ministry to be revealed in a demand for leaders in religion, rather than mere organization promoters? Does the general attendance at ordination services show a proper respect for the Christian ministry?

Are the seminaries seeing to it that their students attain the mental background adequate to face the scientific; the psychological; and the materialistic attitudes of our day; and to gain from science and psychology, aid in preaching and teaching the Gospel? Would more adequate provision for women students aid in raising academic and sacrificial standards? Is the atmosphere of our seminaries conducive to grasping the Gospel and then preaching it with power? Do they emphasize sufficiently the steely virtues, such as a sense of obligation, to undertakings entered into—or provide training in the courtesies of life?

Should licensure of student summer workers be tolerated unless provision is made for preliminary instructions and adequate supervision? (Note what Maine has done along this line.)

How general is the practice of ordination by the Association rather than by a specially constituted council? Can and ought this practice to become general? Would it be well to ordain a number of candidates at once and at the seminary or Conference meeting—rather than to ordain these persons one by one each at a church of special interest to the candidate?

Would it be well to hold the examination at a different time from the ordination service? (There is considerable complaint of ordinations crowded through on pretexts of dinners being prepared, programs having been printed, notices of an ordination service having been inserted in the papers.)

Recommendations

1. It is recommended that the Committee be continued for the next biennium.
2. It is recommended that the Committee take into consideration the findings of the sectional meeting provided for at this meeting of the Council, and present definite recommendations for the adoption of the Council at its next meeting.

REPORT OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA

The twentieth anniversary of the Federal Council of Churches, which occurred last year, served to call attention to the remarkable advance which has been made in that brief period in the spirit and practice of interchurch cooperation. The development of the Council in a simple and gradual way, without any sensational publicity or promotional efforts, has made it abundantly clear that the churches are passing out of an era of separation into one of increasing fellowship and united service. The Quadrennial Meeting of the Council, held in Rochester, N. Y., last December, was an occasion for a re-study of the Council with special reference to the possibility of a fresh advance toward a larger cooperation and unity.

The following are a few of the important activities of the Federal Council during the past year, set forth in the briefest outline, as an indication of the kind of service which the churches are now rendering unitedly through the Council.

1. The emphasis upon building up a larger number of state federations of churches, as the best means of furthering comity and cooperation in local areas, has resulted in the development of the New York State Council of Churches and the Pennsylvania State Federation of Churches to a point where each now has a full-time executive secretary. A total of six great states are now organized for cooperative action in this way; in two others state councils of churches have been organized which are still dependent upon voluntary service for their leadership. The extension of state and local federation is being made a major feature of the Council's work and the Mid-West Office, located in Chicago, is being developed as an important center from which to carry on this work.

2. The Research Department, in addition to continuing the regular weekly publication of Information Service as a means of helping ministers and other religious workers to secure a better factual basis for their ethical teaching, at the request of groups of churches in the areas concerned has made several extensive studies. The most important of these were:

(a) A study of industrial relations in the bituminous coal fields of Western Pennsylvania.

(b) A study of the rural-urban conflict in the Chicago dairy district.

(c) A study of the disturbed industrial relations in the coal fields of Colorado (not yet published).

Other simpler studies and also reviews of the industrial developments and of the rural conditions during the year have been published as special numbers of Information Service.

3. The effort to make the training of children, especially along lines of sex education, a normal part of the program of religious education in the churches has been carried into its second year with encouraging results. The experiment, begun in a few cities a year or two ago, of encouraging parents' classes for this purpose in local churches, has proved so constructive that increased attention is being given to it.

4. The successful experience of the Church and Drama Association, initiated by the Federal Council as an independent body in order to secure the fuller cooperation of Roman Catholic and Jewish leaders, in bringing to the notice of church people the most worth while productions on the stage, has now led to the development of a special commission on motion pictures and drama, which expects shortly to begin a program of recommending films which are thoroughly adaptable for use by religious agencies and also of calling attention to films in the commercial motion picture houses which merit support from those who have the highest ideals at heart.

5. The various phases of the effort to use the radio for religious purposes have been unified by the Federal Council through a relationship with the National Broadcasting Company and associated stations, which provides that the religious programs broadcast nationally over several chains of stations are sponsored by the Council. The services for which the Federal Council is now responsible and which are broadcast over a wide hook-up of stations are as follows: A Young People's Conference, Sunday afternoon at 3:00; a full service of religious worship and address, Sunday afternoon at 4:00; a sermon, Sunday afternoon at 5:30; a mid-week evening hymn service; daily morning prayers (except Sunday).

6. The special Committee on Marriage and the Home has issued the first of its reports, dealing with Christian Ideals of Love and Marriage. This report, published in full in the Current History Magazine and widely commented on in the press, has attracted widespread attention and created a mood of anticipation of the further sections of the report, which are to consider more concrete questions such as divorce and preparation for marriage.

7. The Commission on Race Relations has undertaken a new program of enlisting the interest of the missionary and other organizations of women in efforts for better inter-racial understanding. The Commission played the primary part in bringing about the National Conference on Inter-racial Problems in the Light of Social Research, held in Washington last December by a large group of organizations interested in the problems of the Negro.

8. The friendship project with the children of Mexico, carried on by the Committee on World Friendship among Children, was a still greater success than the earlier Japanese doll project. More than 30,000 friendship school bags were sent by the children of Sunday schools and other agencies of the United States to the children of Mexico. At the great anniversary of Mexican independence, the formal presentation of the bags in behalf of the American churches was made by President Calles.

9. In the creation of public opinion which led to the ratification of the Peace Pact the Federal Council of Churches throughout the whole year played a vigorous part. Its presentation of the memorial on this subject, signed by 190,000 church leaders in all parts of the country, to the President and the Secretary of State made a distinct impression of the support of religious forces.

10. The program of Christian aid to other lands has been carried forward steadily. The service of the Committee on Mercy and Relief has been put at the disposal of the China Famine Relief Fund, including the active work of Dr. Sidney L. Gulick as director over a period of several months. The Commission on Relations with Religious Bodies in Europe has continued its beneficent work of co-operation with the Central Bureau for Relief of The Evangelical Churches of Europe. The American cooperation with, and support of, the International Christian Social Institute and Research Bureau, set up at Geneva as one of the outcomes of the Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work, has been assumed.

11. The service of the Council in furnishing a point of contact between the churches and the labor movement was effectively illustrated in the work done by the Social Service Commission in New Orleans at the time of the convention of the American Federation of Labor. As a result of careful preparations made in advance by the Commission, nearly all the important pulpits of the city were opened to speakers upon the moral and spiritual ideals of the labor movement.

12. The Commission on Evangelism has gone still further in developing a united approach to communities on the part of the denominational executives who are responsible for evangelism. The secretaries of the major denominations, in company with Dr. Goodell of the Federal Council, have formed a team which has made an itinerary of leading cities in the Middle West for conference with all the ministers of the community on their program for recruiting the membership of the churches and strengthening the spiritual life. At the Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church last October the Federal Council's Commission on Evangelism was added to the areas of the Federal Council's work in which the Protestant Episcopal Church is now officially cooperating.

13. The "Fellowship of Prayer," prepared as a manual for personal devotional use during the Lenten period, is again reaching a circulation of almost a million copies.

14. The new relationship established between the Federal Council of Churches and the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions has been satisfactory beyond the highest anticipations. The three bodies, now occupying a common office, carry on their work as a single unit. The most important phase of this work is the "Five-Year Program of Survey and Adjustment," sponsored by the three bodies, which is focusing attention, state by state, upon the necessity for a better distribution of Protestant churches in local fields.

Other important cooperative tasks carried on by the churches through the Council are described in the volume of printed reports for the past year, including the work of the Committee on Goodwill between Jews and Christians, the Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, the Committee on Religious Work on the Canal Zone, the Committee on Relations with Eastern Churches, the Committee on Financial and Fiduciary Matters and the Editorial Council of the Religious Press.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

The particular point of emphasis in the present biennium of the American Board has been the increased cooperation within the denomination with the other missionary societies. Under the leadership of the Promotional Council and Secretary Merrill, the denomination has attained the highest degree of partnership and the spirit of sharing that we have ever known. The text might almost be used: "looking also on the things of others."

This biennium has also seen a number of interesting developments in the reorganization of the Board's work, due to the merger of the three Woman's Boards with the American Board. At the meeting at Omaha this merger had been consummated, but it was entirely unknown what would be the effect upon the Board's work, both at home and on the field. In general it may be said that on the mission fields it has unified the work to a satisfactory degree, combining questions of finance, property, transmission of funds, and administration, and reducing in some degree the details of correspondence. The problem at home was to conserve the receipts from the three Woman's Boards in full, so that no decreased total of gifts should be noted. In this the Board has been disappointed for the report of the Treasury shows us a steady decrease in income for the last four years, with a more rapid curve of descent for 1927-28. It is believed this is due to the abandoning of the preferred position occupied by the women workers in their close contact with the local churches. It has been noted that whereas the Woman's Boards in some parts of the country formerly had actually secured 20% or more of the apportionment actually raised, under the merger the Board can only hope to receive 14% of this amount and in this one change the Board has stood to lose many thousands of dollars. The merger has, therefore, laid an extra burden upon the treasury of the American Board, and the effect of this is still revealed in the treasurer's report.

After raising the old debt of $213,000 which was a war legacy and reporting the books all clear at Omaha, it was a grievous disappointment to have to report a large deficit the following year. On September 1, 1928, a small surplus for the current year, and other gifts, decreased the deficit and the debit balance was finally wiped out by the change in method of handling the Twentieth Century Fund, as reported in the treasury section.

We are glad to report to the Detroit meeting of the National Council that the Board stands now clear of debt except for one sum covered by a pledge from a generous individual, which will probably be paid in the very near future. Meanwhile, decreasing receipts from the churches have increased anxiety. It is clear from the financial side that nothing but an awakening of consecration and determination wide-spread throughout the churches, will produce an increased income to adequately meet the present demands of the Board. For this reason the Board welcomes the proposed Plan of Advance for 1929 under the leadership of Dr. Charles C. Merrill, and eagerly cooperates in every possible method of spreading news throughout the churches and of awakening a spirit of genuine partnership among the thousands of its friends. It is believed that under merger conditions we can yet increase the interest on the part of women workers in every church and thus overcome the situation of two years ago when the Board lost the influence and eager interest of the many branch treasurers of the women's organizations who were responsible for securing their quotas of foreign missionary gifts.

The Gifts of Individuals

Increasingly the Board has been aided by generous gifts of the group of closer friends who read the Missionary Herald and who make regular annual gifts over and beyond their contributions through the church envelopes to the Board's treasury. For several years this total has gone considerably beyond the $100,000 mark. It is believed that many individuals who subscribe in the Every Member Canvass what they regard as their fair share of the benevolence budget have by no means exhausted their ability or willingness to give thereby, and stand ready to express their interest in particular missionaries or projects and in the Board's welfare by sending extra gifts. Each year between three and four thousand individuals can be counted on to send their personal checks. This source of income must be developed, since it creates personal interest even more than does the more broadly-based but possibly more mechanical method of the envelope subscription. Both methods must be utilized. Through the Every Member Canvass it is true that a much larger number of persons contribute to the Board's treasury each year than used to be the case when response was made to appeals through a special collection. It is from this group who have given for many years that the Board must expect Conditional Gifts and larger legacies which are today adding so significant a portion of the Board's income. The way must always be open for individuals to be in close touch with the Board's treasurer and officers at the moment when Christian stewardship impells them to make disposition of their estate through their last will and testament. In too many cases individuals prove their loyalty by generous gifts, yet pass away without having stamped this principle of stewardship on the will which finally disposes of their estate.

Progress in Projects

A full report of gratifying progress in the assignment of Projects to local churches was made at the October annual meeting. It was there stated that a careful estimate found that 267 churches were enrolled in the Project Plan after one year of cultivation, but in the second year the list of interested churches rose to 1,500.

The Project Plan offers the best opportunity for missionary education that is open to the churches. If the church has accepted an assignment to a particular field or type of work, the available material of programs, report letters from the field, and visits of their own missionaries, naturally cultivates a particular degree of interest. The plan must be carried forward. The only danger at present apparently is that some of the report material does not find its way to the attention of the pews of the enlisted churches. If the Board can secure the more active participation of pastors and leading missionary workers in local churches, the Project Plan can be made an unqualified success.

The Candidate Year

In the missionary appointments for the year ending August 31, 1928, the usual conservative policy of the Board was augmented by a definite cut in the appropriations. Only the most urgent positions were authorized, the policy being to bolster up depleted staffs in our educational institutions and to meet emergency situations in what seemed to be the most needy fields.

During the year forty new missionaries received appointment to six different countries by the Prudential Committee for work directly under the Board. Thirteen additional candidates were approved for institutions affiliated with the Board.

As will be seen from the following schedule this is the smallest number that has been sent out for some years.

1920.....	73	1924.....	47
1921.....	56	1925.....	55
1922.....	53	1926.....	48
1923.....	48	1927.....	43

THE TREASURY

At the National Council meeting at Omaha the Treasurer's estimate indicated a possible deficit August 31, 1927 of $252,109.15. The final outcome of the year showed a deficit of $147,956.46, the difference being due both to increased gifts and decreased expenditures over the estimate for the closing four months.

The fiscal year September 1, 1927 to August 31, 1928 showed receipts and expenditures as follows:

Total receipts	$2,132,375.02
Total expenditures	2,120,935.55
Surplus	$ 11,439.47

At the Annual Meeting of the Board held in Bridgeport in October 1928 there was taken action changing the present method of operation of the Twentieth Century Fund, the Fund used for equalization of Legacy Income. Under the new plan 40% of current Legacies plus the principal of the Fund, are to be credited to current income, instead of 33 1/3% as formerly. As a result of this change it is not necessary to maintain as large an Equalization Fund as formerly. The Board therefore authorized the transfer of a sufficient amount from the principal of the Twentieth Century Fund to liquidate the deficit then outstanding, not including the $10,000 covered by pledge. This action was taken on condition that it did not reduce the principal of the Fund below the amount necessary for equalization on the new basis. This transfer left the principal of the Fund practically at the figure necessary for equalization on the new basis and it is therefore impossible to repeat this in other years. It did, however, make it possible to enter this present fiscal year free from an accumulated deficit.

The Prudential Committee, in planning the budget for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1929, felt it necessary to plan its appropriations not to exceed a carefully estimated total of income. Income from Legacies, Conditional Gifts and Funds was carefully estimated on the basis of known items and averages of previous years. The estimate of income from churches and individuals was fixed at the sum which was received from these sources in the previous years. At the present time (March 15) our actual receipts from these two latter sources show a loss of $40,439.33. The outcome of the year depends upon whether the income from churches and individuals will make up this loss. In this connection, a comparison of apportionment gifts for the foreign work is significant. The first three years in the comparison indicate the gifts to the American Board and the Woman's Boards, while for the last two years it indicates the gifts to the Merged Board.

1925	1,305,863
1926	1,289,709
1927	1,214,166
1928	1,169,357

THE AMERICAN BOARD AT THE FRONT

The Quickening Pace

The Orient is no longer slow moving. In all the Eastern lands changes are coming; often sudden and overturning. Missionaries who are detained in this country on their furlough for longer than a single year feel they have to get acquainted afresh with their fields when they return. Political conditions have altered; social upheavels have changed the face of things; economic forces are exerting new pressures; religious unrest opens new doors of need and opportunity. So the passing of two years calls attention to new situations on many of the American Board fields.

Turkey Takes the Lead

History does not record such speedy changes as have brought Turkey in a few years from a degenerate and despised Eastern despotism to membership in the family of western nations. Influenced by the changed status of Turkey, Afghanistan is in revolution; Persia is making sweeping reforms; and Egypt is stirring with modernistic tendencies, as shown by the fact that a thousand copies of the Bible have been sold for official use in the great Azhar University. The bold stand taken by Turkey regarding foreign education has helped to guide China's leaders who have visited Angora as a center of successful Nationalism.

Modifying Missionary Methods

The attitude of the new government on religion is not one of indifference but of firm fairness. The Turkish authorities frown upon propaganda and prohibit efforts in schools to change the religion of youth. On a charge of disregarding this law, our teachers in Brousa were tried and condemned, though their sentence was nominal. On the other hand the government permits in public print a strong crusade against the blindness and bigotry of the old practices of Islam and is in favor of genuineness, beauty and simplicity. Character is rated higher than traditional forms.

With these changed attitudes a thousand old barriers are removed. Doors of opportunity long bolted and barred, as Dr. Zwemer says, are "nailed open." The Missionaries are gradually finding in school, hospital, press and playground, common ideals and aspirations with the Turkish leaders. Thus by an emphasis on life rather than creed they are free to show the beauty of the ways of Jesus.

The People of the Open Door

While America was devising new means for still further closing Ellis Island to the hungry and down-trodden out-castes of the Near East, Greece opened her ports to a million and a half refugees from Turkey. This increased the population by twenty percent and completely upset the economic balance. Within three years, however, the government recognized that this immigrant horde was a blessing and not a curse. Because our institutions in Salonica and Athens have so thoroughly understood the refugee problems and have so heartily cooperated with the government in solving them, numerous demonstrations of practical helpfulness have been given. The latest expression of confidence is the grant by the Refugee Settlement Commission of a commodious campus for our Girls' Junior College at Athens.

Devotion to Education in Bulgaria

Despite economic depression American academic education has not lost its popularity among the Bulgarians. An avalanche of requests for admission to Sofia College has followed the reorganization of what was formerly known as the Samokov School. The Girls' Department has occupied its fine new buildings at Simeonovo outside of Sofia. The buildings for the Boy's Department are being erected, and the Bulgarian government and people take just pride in this new demonstration of successful cooperation in higher education. The state has contributed thousands of dollars' worth of timber for these new buildings free of all cost to the college.

Helping the Farmer

No educational plan proposed by the Board ever received from the people a more hearty welcome than the new Folk School in Bulgaria. Seventeen different towns and villages are competing to secure its location in their midst and each with a generous offer of free land. Dr. and Mrs. Haskell will be obliged to disappoint all but one of these rural centers as they establish the new school whose aim is to help the common farmer and all his family in his farming life.

Phenomenal Growth in West Africa

The colored churches of America may well be proud of the development at Galangue, their own particular station in the West Central Africa Mission. In 1923 there was not a missionary within one hundred miles of the spot which now boasts a fully equipped mission station with evangelistic, educational, medical and industrial work, and a large number of out-stations. All this development cost about $31,000—a gilt-edged investment made by the colored Congregationalists of the United States. The work is deep as it is broad and a supreme satisfaction to the Mission of which it is a part.

Where Expansion Cannot Be Checked

Native Christians have been bearing their witness for nearly forty years in the coastal regions of Portuguese East Africa and have been calling for missionary help. The insistent call of these sons of the soil, together with the heroic sacrifices of the near-by missionaries in Rhodesia, have been matched with the loyalty of friends in America, particularly in the Fairfield Association of Connecticut, and the Board has been compelled to permit the opening of a new station at Machemeje. Twenty-five hundred acres of land have been purchased on the Buzi River half-way between the coast and Mount Silinda. Buildings are now being constructed to accommodate the American staff, including a doctor, who has been designated for the work.

The Big Change in China

The United Church has come into being. The first General Assembly of the "Church of Christ in China" took place in 1927. Our Foochow and Shaowu groups are full members of this Church, which includes nearly one-third of the Protestant Christians in China; our former "Congregationalists" are organized in the Mid-Fukien and north Fukien Divisional Councils of the Church of Christ.

Missionaries have returned to all stations so that in 1929 about the normal percentage are on the field at work. There has been a heavy loss, however, in the total force, a decrease of 20% in two years. The withdrawals were principally for health reasons. Everywhere rural Christianity is being studied and worked. County fairs, exhibits, new implements and new seeds, new and better poultry and pigs—these all come in as a part of the educational-and-religious work which we are attempting to do. Preachers and teachers must be better trained than before; more practically trained for the country where they are to live. Laymen and laywomen in great numbers must be trained and used by the church. Politically China has entered the "Period of Tutelage and Reconstruction." The Chinese Church too is walking humbly in that period.

Merging Mission and Church in Japan

Japan has a strong Kumiai (Congregational) Church with an independent life of its own. A few years ago the Mission came into organic connection with Kumiai. It gave over its evangelistic work into the charge of the Kumiai Riji (Board of Directors), four Mission members having a place. More recently six institutions carried by the Mission—schools, kindergartens, social service centers, and summer camps—were also brought under a Central Committee elected by Riji and Mission. Thus each year more closely the strength of the missionaries in Japan is bound in with that of the Japanese church.

Religious Ferment

India and Ceylon are in ferment and missionary work therein presents striking contrasts. There has come rapid progress in lines of work. Schools are widening in their range and popularity; vocational, agricultural, rural departments of study are developing. Indian pastors, teachers, supervisors are taking over responsibilities. The Christian communities, and leaders have now to be reckoned with. There is a growing self-consciousness, and Christ is being lifted up into a commanding place in Indian thought. The outlook for Christian advance is thus in many ways bright and cheering.

At the same time the obstacles in the way of advance are still huge and appalling. While breaks in the walls have been effected many times and in many ways, while some forms of hostility have been overcome, while friendlier relations obtain, and regard and good will are commonly observed between the Christian forces and the masses of the people, still the ingrained antagonisms, that embittered India and Ceylon long before Christianity came to them, continue and every now and then surge up in fresh outbreaks. Racial enmities, religious fanaticism, caste separatism, yield slowly, and suddenly recur with deadly consequences. In these last two years communal strife has been rampant; India's path toward national unity and peaceful prosperity is still thick.

The Island Fields

While progress in the Philippine Mission has been slow, because of inadequate provision of workers and of funds, it is becoming apparent that a substantial hold has been secured and there are signs of coming rapid advance. Church self-support in the mission, church union among the several missions, the rising purpose to reach out for the Moro peoples, all make for a new day in this youngest of the Board fields. New life has come to the Micronesia Mission with the advent of a missionary family, just arrived, to reinforce the three single women who have worked these islands for more than thirty years.

A new experiment is under way in Mexico, in the transfer by the Board of the conduct of its general missionary work there to the Southern California Conference of Congregational Churches, the change being made in 1928. The fact that the Board has now only one missionary resident in Czechoslovakia and none now resident in Spain, indicates how fully it is seeking to make its help to evangelical faith in those lands a support of the indigenous forces of the land, rather than the enforcement of an outside propaganda.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION

The Department of Missions

The A. M. A. field of work remains very much the same as in former years. Naturally, progress in the assumption of civic responsibilities gradually reduces the extent of this field while at the same time it makes increased demands for a more intensive and higher quality of work.

Six outstanding facts arrest the attention of even the casual observer of the Negroes to-day: (1) they continue to increase in population with practically no additions from Africa; (2) they believe in education as their chief means of salvation; (3) they are moving from the country to the city in the South as well as from the South to the great urban centers of the North; (4) they have proved themselves physically adapted to every section of our land; (5) they have successfully entered every skillful occupation and profession; (6) they smart under racial discrimination with a sensitiveness in keeping with their cultural progress.

So far as the A. M. A. is concerned these facts make only more emphatic the demand for higher education. Teachers, preachers, doctors, lawyers, writers, singers, artists, merchants, engineers, need to be people of broad culture and specialized training.

The A. M. A. could wisely use all its resources for the higher education of Negroes alone. At the same time it is necessary to maintain a few preparatory schools and academies. In some places they are needed to bridge the gap until satisfactory public high schools are built everywhere.

The southern churches began their new administrative policy in the fall in keeping with the scientific survey made a year ago. The churches are classified in three groups: (1) The possible self-supporting churches. (2) Probationary churches which have an opportunity to be placed in group one if they take on new life and promise. (3) Strictly missionary churches in communities where the economic resources preclude the very simplest kind of churches.

The responsibilities for church work among the Indians of South Dakota has been placed increasingly in the hands of the Indians themselves, under the pastoral guidance of Mr. Hertz.

At Elbowoods, North Dakota, a small elementary school is maintained with Mr. Case in charge. He also acts as a general helper for the Gros Ventre, Arickaree, and Mandan Indians.

Two years ago Santee Training School at Santee, Nebraska, became a four-year high school with encouraging results.

The A. M. A. continues its responsibilities for the Japanese and Chinese in Washington and Utah. Beginning last fall the appropriation to the Hawaiian Evangelical Association was discontinued, primarily because of the reduction in income from the churches.

The first of last October the work and properties at Cubero, San Mateo, Seboyeta and Marquez, New Mexico, were transferred to the Congregational Home Missionary Society. This leaves the A. M. A. responsible for only Rio Grande Institute at Albuquerque.

At Pleasant Hill, Tennessee, the A. M. A. not only maintains its academy but also cooperates with the C. H. M. S. in furnishing a pastor for the Congregational Church and "larger parish."

The aid given to the John C. Campbell Folk School at Brasstown, North Carolina, is proving a worthwhile investment in a wholly new adult and community educational experiment.

Blanche Kellogg Institute, a boarding high school and Christian home for over seventy happy and promising Porto Rican girls, has become a standard high school.

Ryder Memorial Hospital at Humacao, now has fourteen nurses in training and a staff of three physicians and two registered nurses.

The evangelical church of the Province of Humacao is entirely manned by Porto Ricans. These churches now form the Porto Rican Congregational Conference and will have their official representative at this meeting of the National Council.

On September 13 Porto Rico experienced the most devastating hurricane known in its history. Two hundred and seventy-one people lost their lives and a half million were left homeless. The Province of Humacao was hit hardest and much damage was done to the hospital, churches and parsonages. Blanche Kellogg Institute suffered also but not nearly so seriously.

An appeal to the churches for fifty thousand dollars aid was authorized at once by the Commission on Missions. At the time of this writing over forty-eight thousand dollars had been received, for which the officers of the A. M. A. and its Porto Rican workers and friends are exceedingly grateful.

In addition to maintaining and administering the work for which the A. M. A. is directly responsible we also cooperate in the financial and active support of: The Commission on Missions of the Congregational Churches, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Bible Society, the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions, the Missionary Education Movement, the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America, the Evangelical Union of Porto Rico, the Union Seminary of Porto Rico, the Southwest Council of Spanish-Speaking Work, the Mountaineer's Conference, Fisk University, The Inter-racial Commission in the South, and the Federal Council's Commission on the Church and Race Relations. In addition to this we cooperate in various ways with southern school boards and they with us. The same is true of the General Education Board and the Rosenwald Fund.

The movement for better buildings, better kept buildings, better equipped buildings and more attractive campuses continued steadily during the past two years. We can almost boast now that the A. M. A. hasn't a single school without running water, bathing facilities, sanitary sewers and electric lights. Few schools are without science laboratory equipment and some of them have standard equipment. Beginning in the fall decided steps forward were taken in providing better libraries. For the most part the buildings are now kept well painted. For all the major schools excellent campus plans have been prepared by an expert landscape engineer.

Much still remains to be done just as soon as funds become available. If we could secure a million dollars for buildings and equipment and then could have from seventy-five to eighty thousand dollars annually for repairs and replacements we would be well prepared to do first-class work in attractive buildings on beautiful campuses. Such facilities not only furnish the requisite tools for education, but are also an education in themselves, aesthetically, morally and spiritually. At the same time they stimulate communities and whole sections of the country to build better homes, schools, churches and factories.

Last June, rules and regulations were adopted by the Association, on actuarial advice, governing the retiring allowances of all persons who have been in service ten years or more and who were fifty-two years of age or over in 1928. According to these rules, the Association has the privilege of retiring a worker at sixty-two years of age; the worker may request retirement at sixty-five; and retirement becomes automatic at sixty-eight. It is hoped that within another year a participating plan of annuities will be agreed upon for younger workers. In the case of ordained persons of the Congregational fellowship the Association cooperates in providing annuities through the annuity program for Congregational ministers.

The receipts of the Association from the Congregational churches during the past few years are shown in the following table:

1922-23	$320,917.80
1923-24	325,169.27
1924-25	319,906.14
1925-26	290,417.21
1926-27	266,575.57
1927-28	257,386.67

It will be noted that there was a continual reduction due to the smaller percentage allotted to the Association during the past few years. We are glad to report that gifts from individuals have been larger than for many years, amounting to $18,092.93 from October first 1927 to October first 1928, in addition to the splendid receipts for Porto Rican Relief. A special campaign for Conditional Gifts was inaugurated by the A. M. A. and the Laymen's Advisory Committee resulting in the receipt of $67,180.00 during the same period.

During the past two years three parties have been conducted through the South and one to Porto Rico resulting in greatly increased interest in the work.

One gratifying item in this report is the continual increase in receipts from tuitions amounting to $148,740.86 during the past single year. It will be noted that this is more than one-half as much as all the Congregational churches contributed to our work. This supplies a splendid commentary upon the spirit of self-help which is one of the finest products of our educational work. The receipts from various sources are graphically shown in the following percentages:

	1926-27	1927-28
Churches and affiliated organizations furnished..	26%	18%
Individuals	13%	18%
General Education Board	6%	—
Legacies	21%	20%
Income from invested funds	23%	34%
Tuition	11%	10%

The large financial resources of the Association and its substantial annual receipts are not yet adequate for the maintenance of the work of the churches, colleges, schools and hospitals on the high standard desirable. The operation of a nationwide work is so vast that now resources must be had for the replacement of buildings and equipment and a reasonable expansion of strategic institutions that have proved unable to meet the increasing needs of their communities.

REPORT OF THE CHURCH EXTENSION BOARDS

including

The Congregational Home Missionary Society
The Congregational Church Building Society
The Congregational Sunday School Extension Society

Nature and Scope of Work

These three societies, called jointly "The Church Extension Boards," are responsible for founding and helping to maintain Sunday Schools and churches in the United States outside of twenty-two self-supporting conferences which conduct their own home missionary activities,* and for aiding in the erection of churches and parsonages throughout the entire country. They receive and disburse more than a million dollars annually and have invested funds of nearly four millions. Their work extends to city, town and country, to immigrants, resident foreign-speaking groups, and Northern Negroes. Their ministry includes religious teaching, evangelism, preaching, and many forms of pastoral, social, and fellowship service.

Summary of a Year's Work

As this report is compiled before the close of the current fiscal year, it is necessary to use the figures for the year ending March 31, 1928, but these are fairly typical of the results regularly accomplished in the national home missionary field insofar as such results are capable of statistical tabulation. It shows the following major items:

Number of missionary churches	647
Number of missionaries	520
Total membership, aided churches, missions and preaching stations.....	37,410
Total accessions	4,736
Additions on confessions	3,290
Total Sunday School enrollment	46,391
New churches organized	6
Churches reaching self-support	15
New church buildings and parsonages	27
Churches, missions and preaching stations, among the foreign born	161
Student summer workers	107

*The American Missionary Association is charged with the care of Negro missionary churches in the South.

The Pay As You Go Plan

There are two general policies either of which may be followed in the administration of denominational benevolences. The first looks mainly to need and opportunity. It endeavors to secure as large an advance income as possible but does not hesitate to go into debt, if necessary, in order to maintain work already begun or even to begin new work of a peculiarly demanding nature. This policy is based on the belief that money will always be forthcoming for the needs of the Kingdom if those needs are earnestly presented and that a deficit is a concrete and compelling way of bringing the situation to the attention of churches and individuals. The second method of procedure is more conservative. It consists on having money in hand or in immediate prospect before spending it. While alert to the opportunities of new fields and to the duty of bringing them to public attention, it feels responsible for occupying them only in such measure as actual income permits. It endeavors to arrive in advance at a balanced budget and to close each year free from debt.

The latter policy has been adopted by the Church Extension Boards. In January, 1927, the Directors ordered that the budget presented in 1928 should be brought within the limits of probable income. This was accomplished by severely restricting the allowance both for administration and promotion and for missionary service. Under this budget, which became effective April 1, 1928, reductions in expenditure have amounted, in the eleven months which have elapsed at the time this is written, to $58,305, as compared with the similar period last year. Contributions for the same time have increased, as have legacies. In consequence it is anticipated that the close of the fiscal year will show a clean balance sheet except for the net deficit of $83,147 carried over from the year before; and the latter, it is expected, will be gradually absorbed as time goes on.

Fields White Unto the Harvest

While the financial status just outlined gives ground for satisfaction, it should be remembered that it has not been achieved without serious restriction of normal expansion and that if Congregationalism is to do its part in the conquest of America for Christ, additional resources must be made available. The following excerpts from recent reports from our Superintendents will give an idea of some of the immediate and pressing demands which call for more generous support of national home missions:

Lucius O. Baird, Washington, Northern Idaho and Alaska:

"Out of four fields in Alaska, only one can be helped. Out of eleven fields in Idaho, only two can be helped."

Claton S. Rice, Utah and Southern Idaho:

"If we had $2,000 additional to put into work, we should recommend the appointment of an assistant to the pastor at Pocatello. Our best strategy is to hit hard there, just where the Mormon church is making its most persistent effort to Mormonize a community."

Elmer H. Johnson, Montana:

"Vast areas are not being served by any denomination. We are leaving fields vacant, deliberately, to save on an inadequate budget. We have given up fields which we were loath to give up, but felt we must to cut expenses."

Arthur J. Sullens, Colorado and Wyoming:

"In one section there is a population of about 2,000 to 2,500, without any church privileges. We need $1,500 for the first year for this work, and if the money is available we are in a position to start as soon as the Spring opens."

Albert E. Ricker, South Central:

"A recent survey showed that in a county of 36 school districts, 18 were without religious services of any kind."

Samuel W. Keck, South Dakota:

"There is a large section within fifty miles of the state capital where there is no Protestant work except the little we are able to do. Last year we spent $180 on this whole territory. A full time man there would be a wonderful blessing."

Edwin C. Gillette, Florida:

"We have been unable to go on with our plans of new work in Florida and also have given up the pastor-at-large."

Neil McQuarrie, Georgia and Alabama:

"Needed extension work would probably cost between $6,500 or $7,000 for 1929."

Various Matters of Interest

The prompt response of our constituency in coming to the aid of the churches which suffered from the Florida hurricane last Fall brought joy to many hearts. These extra contributions totaled $18,384. The taking over from the American Missionary Association of the work in the Spanish-speaking Plazas of New Mexico is giving opportunity for the development of a varied program of religious and social service. Release of Dr. Dana, Director of Town and Country Work, to give courses for students preparing for the rural ministry at Hartford, Vanderbilt and Yale points the way for a closer knitting up of the missionary societies with the seminaries. the "cooperative" relationship, whereby missionary states assume direction of the work within their borders, is now in force in Colorado, Montana, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Southern Idaho and Utah. The Middle Atlantic Conference and Pennsylvania are numbered with the entirely autonomous "self-supporting" states. Co-operation with the Home Missions Council in its Five-Year Program of Survey and Adjustment offers another opportunity of practising comity.

Changes in Leadership

The sudden deaths of Treasurer Charles H. Baker and of Supt. David J. Perrin of South Dakota in December, 1927, and February, 1928, respectively, deprived the Extension Boards of the service of tried and true workers whose fruitful labors live after them. Their successors in office, Treasurer William T. Boulton and Supt. Samuel W. Keck, are bringing vigor and efficiency to the discharge of their important duties. Workers change but the work goes on. It offers a high challenge to devoted Christian service to America and, through America, to the world.

The Congregational Church Building Society

The chief business of all of our great missionary societies is the establishment and maintenance of Christian churches in our own country and in the lands beyond, to the end that the Kingdom of God may triumph in all the world. Just as the house is essential to the establishment and perpetuation of the home, so is the church building, with proper equipment, necessary to the establishment, expansion and perpetuation of the church and its work: hence the necessity and the significance of the work of the Church Building Society. The Society seems to be concerned only with material things—in reality, its work is profoundly spiritual. While it is necessary to measure the extent of its work in dollars and cents, it must forever be kept in mind that these figures are used for that purpose only, namely, to give some idea of the magnitude and significance of the fundamental thing which lies back of it all.

In each of the two years of the biennium just past, the receipts of the Society, from all sources, have been over a half a million dollars, making a total, in round numbers, of $1,355,784—a little over $32,000 more than in the preceding biennium.

Nature of This Income

It is of fundamental importance to keep clearly in mind that the major portion of our income is derived from payment of annual loan installments on church and parsonage loans previously made to the churches from our revolving church and parsonage loan funds. Only once, when originally received, are legacies, special gifts and contributions toward the parsonage loan fund counted as original contributions to our work. Such funds are loaned to the churches and the installment repayments are counted as part of our annual income. For example, out of a total income, from all sources, of approximately $700,000 in each year of the biennium, only about $170,000 a year came from contributions from the churches through the apportionment, while the balance, or major portion, came from church and parsonage loan repayments, property sales, returned grants, etc.

On the other hand, it should be remembered that even these loans are, in a true sense, missionary aid, as they are made on easy installment payments through a long period of years, all parsonage loans entirely without interest, as also all church loans not in excess of $2,500, and only nominal interest on the larger church loans. For example, on a regular commercial loan of $2,500, with interest at 6 per cent and payable in annual installments through a period of ten years, a church would pay out in ten years $825 in interest. Our non-interest-bearing $2,500 loan saves the church exactly that much. On a loan of $5,000, a church would pay out exactly twice that much, or, $1,650, whereas, the Society, by furnishing the same loan at 2%, actually saves the church during that period $1,100. On loans above $5,000, the Building Society rate is 3%. A loan of $7,500, for example, at 6%, would cost a church, through a period of ten years, $2,475. One-half that amount, or, $1,237.50, represents the saving to the church by having secured the loan from the Building Society. On a loan of $10,000 from the Building Society, at 3%, the church would pay out, during the ten years, $1,650 interest, and that represents exactly what it saves, because the commercial loan would cost the church exactly twice that much.

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that none of this money loaned to the churches comes to the Society through the contributions made to the Society through the apportionment. The apportionment money all goes into the grant fund and is appropriated to the churches as grants, which are tantamount to actual gifts to all churches which continue in the Congregational fellowship. Let us unselfishly rejoice in the fact that the Building Society makes the most generous provisions of all the denominations in these respects, and our methods of conserving and administering these funds are unsurpassed by any. If those who are disposed to criticise our work and methods of administration would actually stop and think of these things, most of such criticism would utterly disappear, in the face of the facts.

The Magnitude of the Work

Consider, for example, that while the Society has received through the apportionment approximately only $170,000 a year in each of the two years of the biennium, or a total of $340,000, the following table represents the appropriations from our treasury during the same period:

208	Grants calling for	$363,614
243	Church Loans calling for	672,410
79	Parsonage Loans calling for	115,890
<hr/>		<hr/>
530	Grants and Loans Voted	$1,151,914

Comment would seem to be unnecessary: the facts stand out so clearly and conspicuously that "He who runs may read."

Expanding Range of Our Work, with Typical Cases Cited

Under this head, we cannot do better than to quote two paragraphs from the Annual Report of last year:

"The Society has never for a moment failed to carry on the work with which it was entirely engaged during the early years of its history; that is, helping the smaller churches with comparatively small grants and loans, and there are some who suggest a solution of our income problem through confining ourselves strictly to that type of work. It is a fact that these applications for small amounts do have and should have preference on our docket and they are never turned away nor kept waiting. But gradually through the years the Society has been expanding its work, helping along a wider range. The problem which confronts a church in the construction of a new building is that of raising a large sum of money at one time, and sometimes it is quite as difficult for a comparatively large and moderately well-to-do church to meet the building problem confronting it as it is for the smaller church to take care of its problem. The problem is essentially one and, comparatively, the difficulty is just as great in one case as in the other and the need as imperative. Churches building in the suburbs of our growing cities, for example, where the families composing them are mostly salaried people, paying for their homes and keeping their children in school, have precisely the same problem to meet in constructing a church adequate to their needs as the people living in the small village or in the country district in constructing a building that would meet the needs of those conditions. This fundamental proposition cannot be repeated too often, especially where people connected with a small church are asked to contribute funds part of which may go towards furnishing Church Building aid for a much larger, more pretentious and expensive building in some other locality. We must think of these things in relative terms; otherwise we shall miss the fundamental significance of the facts as they are. Some of the most urgent appeals which come to the Building Society come today from churches located in our oldest Congregational localities. We make no discrimination whatever concerning these appeals. The question is whether or not the church in the place where it is located really needs assistance from the Building Society to meet the conditions confronting it in securing proper equipment for the carrying out of the work in that particular field or locality."

"The docket of any month of the year will disclose cases illustrative of the whole wide range of our work. For example, at a recent meeting of the Administrative Committee we made an appropriation of a grant of $500 to a little church down in Kentucky with a membership of twenty-seven and a Sunday School enrollment of sixty, supplied by a student from a nearby seminary, the building constructed mainly of material from the nearby woods and at a cost of $2,000. The building is adequate to the needs of the locality and it would have been extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the little church to finance it without the grant from the Building Society, which was appropriated heartily and without hesitation. But on the same day and within the same hour we were called to consider the application of a church of eight hundred members with a Sunday School enrollment of six hundred located in a college town with a population of about three thousand and where eight hundred students are in attendance and where a church building costing, with necessary furnishings, approximately $150,000 had been erected to meet the long pressing needs and necessities of that community. The constituency of the local church is not wealthy, but many of them young people connected with the college, just in the formative period of their lives, unable to contribute any considerable amount towards such an enterprise. The people themselves made pledges running over a period of several years which they can and will pay gradually. The local bank assisted with an interest bearing loan. The people gave generously and sacrificially. Who shall say that the grant of $5,000 and loan of $5,000 appropriated by the Building Society towards this great enterprise was different in character from the appropriation made to the little church in Kentucky? Think of the latent possibilities in such a situation. Hundreds, and through the years thousands, of young people whose lives are in the formative period and who will go forth to shape the destinies of the world are given adequate church facilities side by side with educational facilities. These are only typical cases of an ordinary monthly docket, but, as the space allotted for this report is so limited, these two must suffice."

Careful Supervision and Small Overhead Expense

Here again, we quote from the same report, as follows:

"Utmost care is exercised in the distribution of our funds. Each individual case is taken up through correspondence and thorough investigation made, the facts and conditions gathered and kept in our files subject to inspection by our constituency at any time. In fact, and quite naturally, we are sometimes charged with being over-zealous in this respect and with lack of generosity of spirit, vision, statesmanship, and so on, because we do take the time to investigate and weigh things thoroughly. We are anxious, on the one hand, that there shall be no loss or waste, and, on the other hand, to give help gladly, joyfully and generously and to the limit of our ability wherever it is needed. And because of our method of dealing directly with the individual church, mostly through correspondence, we are able to do this vast work at minimum cost and with maximum amount of our income made available for the service intended. We work in closest cooperation with field workers, State Superintendents, City Societies and local organizations in trying to secure clear information and right impressions, receiving and giving help."

Our Task and Our Inspiration

The work of administering the funds of this Society wisely, carefully and generously, while at the same time trying to answer frankly and graciously the questions and criticisms, which naturally arise, is hard and exacting, but our inspiration comes from the many helpful hands held out to us, the goodwill and gratitude expressed from so many sources, and the constant thought of the multiplied thousands of human lives helped and that will be blessed through all the years to come, and that this work is part of the great Christian Enterprise which all of our sister organizations are promoting so loyally.

REPORT OF THE CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY

January 1, 1927 to December 31, 1928

The Work. The Education Society is charged with the task of leadership and service in the important and fundamental work of religious education. Some of the specific items in this service are as follows:

The study and interpretation of modern educational theory and practice and its application to the problems of religious education.

The development of plans and policies for our denominational program of religious education.

The collection of data with reference to materials and methods of work.

The results of this work of research and experimentation are made available to our churches through literature, correspondence, interviews, public addresses and conferences, with state, association, and local leaders. A valuable service rendered to many churches, and one which should be more widely extended if funds permitted, is the educational survey of a church by a member of the Society's staff, followed by consultation with the local leaders regarding ways and means of strengthening the educational program of the church.

Organization. For the more effective conduct of this work the Society is organized by departments, as follows:

General Administration. This includes a wide range of general supervision, both educational and promotional. The officers at Boston and at Chicago—the latter in charge of Dr. Gammon, Associate Secretary—are called upon for advice on many and varied problems in religious education. This involves a steadily growing volume of correspondence and interviews. Many of the demands thus made call for full-time secretaries in departments not as yet organized.

Other duties which fall to the General Secretary have to do with the general promotional work, carried on in close cooperation with other boards through the promotional Council; cooperative educational work, through the International Council and its various committees; and various other items which do not come within the scope of other departments.

Missionary Education and World Friendship. The aim of this department is to enrich our educational program and to work for the fuller development of Christian character through knowledge of and participation in the world-wide missionary enterprise. The results of its service may be seen in a broader vision and renewed interest in hundreds of church schools, more loyal support of our missionary work that comes with knowledge and interest, and in the turning of many young lives into paths of Christian service. Under the able leadership of Secretary John L. Lobingier this department has steadily increased the value and effectiveness of its service. Some items of its work are:

World Service Schools, over 2,000 enrolled for systematic missionary education as part of the regular program. Graded materials of greatly improved character furnished quarterly by this department.

Missionary education literature for the guidance and help of leaders, describing the principles and methods to be followed in the general program and in graded work.

Here and There Stories, a home and foreign mission series of stories for girls and boys. Issued ten times a year, with a circulation of over 1,000 copies.

Travel Libraries, fourteen in circulation, each containing ten volumes of missionary reading for different ages. Have met a growing demand.

In addition to these few items the department carries on a continuous service through correspondence, interviews, and conference, supplying the missionary leaders in our churches with information and suggestions for the development of their work.

The Secretary of this department is also the executive secretary of the Committee on Missionary Education of the Commission on Missions, the organization of which has helped greatly to correlate and strengthen our denominational program.

Social Relations. This department carries on its work in cooperation with the National Council Commission on Social Relations. Its aim is to put into our educational program such materials and methods as shall serve to inspire our churches with the spirit of practical Christianity in all human relations. Three main features of its work during the biennium may be noted.

Industrial and Racial Seminars. Seven have been held, bringing together men and women of varying points of view for the frank discussion of facts and issues in industry and race relations.

Literature. The department issues a monthly Bulletin under the title, "Church and Society," each number presenting data and references on some subject of current interest. There is also an increasing circulation of literature, reprints of significant articles, and other material that is of help to the student of social relations.

Women's Department. Through the work of this department the women of our churches are making steady progress in introducing social relations material into the regular program of religious education. An increasing amount of reading is being done throughout the churches and study groups are giving attention to social and industrial problems.

The work of this department, under the leadership of Secretaries Herring and Mrs. Hannah Hume Lee, has attracted increasing interest and attention. Because of the intimate relation of its work to the daily conduct of life, both individual and corporate, it is not surprising that it should give rise to widely different responses, ac-ording to varying points of view. This only serves to indicate the vitality of its message.

Young People's Work. This department, under Secretary Stock, has been making a significant contribution to the training of our future leadership. In the young people of our homes and churches are great possibilities which are to be realized through wise and sympathetic guidance. It has been the policy of this department to encourage initiative and to enlist young people in the task of developing their own programs of study and service. Evidence of its success may be seen in the steadily increasing number of leaders who are availing themselves of its programs and materials and in the marked increase in the membership of young people's organizations in our churches within the last two years.

Some aspects of the service rendered are illustrated by the helps afforded by this department.

Christian Life Topics, three booklets of stimulating and practical topics for discussion.

Devotional Literature, including 12,000 copies of meditations for Holy Week distributed among our own young people.

"Young People and Money," an excellent study of the principles for Stewardship, widely used in summer conferences and local churches.

Pamphlets on the organization and administration of young people's work, also widely used throughout our churches.

The Quarterly Bulletin of suggestions on the best plans and methods revealed by experience, now going regularly to nearly 10,000 leaders.

Back of all this lies a continuous service through correspondence and consultation which is giving practical and highly valued assistance in the development of our work with young people, educational counsel and guidance for about 45 summer conferences, denominational and interdenominational, and the leadership which Mr. Stock is giving in this field, which has been repeatedly recognized in most emphatic manner by those of other denominations as well as our own.

Student Life. This department is also under the leadership of Mr. Stock, although this and the Young People's work are too large and important to be laid upon one person without more assistance than our present resources afford. Our work with students falls into two main divisions.

Student Aid. We are giving financial aid in the form of loans on very easy terms to young men and women studying for the ministry and other forms of Christian life service. About 100 young people each year share in this help to which many of those now in places of distinguished leadership gratefully acknowledge their indebtedness in years gone by.

University Pastors. Some 20,000 of our young people are taking their college courses in state universities and tax-supported institutions. Distinctive religious work here can be carried on only in the local churches and these must have help in meeting the obligations thus laid upon them. The Society gives financial aid to state committees which makes possible the employment of pastors or assistants especially equipped for work with students. The result is that many of those who might otherwise lose their religious loyalties in the stress of university life are enabled to maintain their faith and return to their home churches as leaders.

This is a strategic piece of service, the value of which it would be hard to over-estimate. There are many demands for additional help which we are unable to meet. Besides the financial aid given, the department supplies these university workers with information and suggestions and gathers them from time to time for stimulating conference on the problems of their work.

Leadership Training. Our last biennial statement reported 1,213 students enrolled in training classes and 1,857 credits issued in one year. The figures for 1928 have increased to 2,575 students and 3,700 credits awarded. The significance of this development is realized when one considers that trained leadership is the heart of our educational program. No plans or methods can reach their full measure of success in unskilled hands. Under Secretary Shaver, this department has gone steadily forward, each year widening the scope of its influence and the effectiveness of its work. Slowly but surely the appreciation and interest in this branch of the work has deepened in the churches. There is no more hopeful sign for the future than this.

While the larger part of this service has been in cooperation with the policies and standards of the International Council of Religious Education, we have not been unmindful of the needs of those to whom community training schools are inaccessible. We have been developing a plan of individual reading and study with supervision by correspondence which has produced encouraging results in the improvement of teaching in our schools. A good beginning has been made in this very important phase of our educational service, but it is only a beginning. Fuller development and promotion must wait upon increased resources.

Field Work. All these varied aspects of our program—missionary education, social relations, young people's work, student life, and leadership training—are making their several contributions to the total curriculum of religious education. It is the work of the Field Secretaries to gather all of them into a comprehensive plan and to strive for its adoption and practice in our churches. Practically all of them are seriously handicapped by the excessive size of their respective territories which makes continuous individual attention to local churches well-nigh impossible. The situation is helped by the fact that several of the stronger states have educational secretaries of their own. With these the Society cooperates to the utmost in the furnishing of literature, consultation on various problems, and in personal service by members of the staff in institutes, summer conferences, and similar activities.

The seven secretaries responsible for field service on our present staff are: Dr. Robert W. Gammon, Chicago, who, in addition to representing the Society in many important contacts as Associate Secretary, also carries, with the assistance of Miss Sallie A. McDermott, responsibility for field service in the large district around Illinois; Dr. Charles L. Fisk, Cleveland, Ohio; Dr. Charles G. Murphy, Lincoln, Nebraska; Rev. Franklin J. Estabrook, Denver, Colorado; and Rev. Fred Grey, Seattle, Washington. Each of these has a territory varying from two states in one case to twelve in another.

Under the general plan instituted by the National Council this Society also has the cooperation of field workers of the Extension Boards. It is to be hoped that the way may open for a closer relationship between these and our own staff members in mutual conference regarding plans and policies.

The Foundation for Education

The Foundation for Education, organized as a commission under the National Council in 1921, was united with the Education Society at the Omaha meeting in 1927. The terms of the merger provide that its work shall be committed to a special department of the Society, under the immediate direction of a committee of fifteen and a full-time secretary. The determination of policies, appropriations, and grants is subject to the approval of the Board of Directors or its Administrative or Finance Committee.

Much difficulty has been experienced in the search for a secretary. Lacking such leadership the work necessarily moves but slowly. The office work at Chicago has been transferred meanwhile to the Society's office under Dr. Gammon as Acting Secretary. In this work he has been ably assisted by Miss McDermott. This has resulted in very considerable reduction of overhead expense. The Society is greatly indebted to Mr. John R. Montgomery, of Chicago, who, as chairman of the Committee, has given much time to its affairs; and to President George W. Nash, of Yankton College, formerly president of the Foundation, who has served as Corresponding Secretary of the Committee, and has aided in determining appropriations and conducting studies of educational institutions.

The financial affairs of the Foundation are now handled by the Educational Society treasurer. Detailed accounts are accurately kept, and appropriations granted are paid quarterly. The trust funds of the Foundation are safely invested in the same manner as other funds of the Society.

The amount of financial aid given to the Congregational educational institutions through the Foundation since its organization in 1921 is now more than $300,000. Institutions aided during the last two years include Doane, Fargo, Northland, Olivet, Pacific University, Piedmont, Ripon, Rollins, Yankton, Billings, Kidder, Redfield, Iberia, Thorsby, Ward, Atlanta Theological Seminary, Bangor Theological Seminary, Pacific School of Religion, Union Theological College, and Schaufler Training School.

Inasmuch as receipts in former years failed to equal the estimates upon which appropriations were made, a deficit of from $10,000 to $14,000 has remained at the end of each fiscal year since 1926. This has been paid out of receipts of the year following. In order to avoid such deficits and place the affairs of the Foundation on a firm basis, appropriations for 1929 have been somewhat reduced. It is hoped that larger income may make possible a return to a more generous treatment of our educational institutions.

Fargo College is, at the time this is written, in the midst of a financial campaign which it is hoped will enable the college to reopen next Fall. Olivet College has completed two new buildings—a boy's dormitory and a gymnasium, the former to replace Parsons Hall, burned last year. Northland has put on a thorough-going campaign for endowment and has the largest number of students in its history. Billings is making headway at all points of its program and also registers the high record mark in enrollment. Atlanta Seminary is merging with Elon College, North Carolina, a combination which should be of advantage to both institutions. Practically all of our educational institutions are increasing endowments, adding to or improving equipment, and increasing faculties to meet the growing demands made upon them.

Finances

Through rigid economy which has seriously handicapped the work of the Society at many points, the indebtedness of $37,600 at the close of 1926 has been wiped out and a surplus of $4,640 is shown by the balance sheet of December 31, 1928. This has been accomplished in spite of the reduction of one percent in the Society's apportionment for last year. While this is encouraging it cannot be allowed to obscure the fact that no development of our educational service at all adequate to meet the growing needs can be possible without larger financial resources than are now available. There is urgent need for additions to our staff, for more literature for the assistance of leaders, and for some increases in salary for workers who have served faithfully and well.

The total income for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1927 was $170,727.96; total expenditures $163,968.80; leaving a balance of $6,759.16 for the year. A fuller statement for the year ending December 31, 1928 is as follows:

REPORT OF THE CONGREGATIONAL PUBLISHING SOCIETY

Religion and science are the two great interests in the popular mind today. That this is so can be seen from even a casual survey of the daily press and monthly magazines. People want to know if there is a God, and if so, what he is like. To many, science has seemed to make Him unnecessary and unreal. Others no longer accept the old ideas of God and man and the world and the relationships of each to the other, but have not been able to discover the answer to their problem. The masses in general have an inquiring or critical or agnostic attitude on these fundamental questions.

Young people today are facing new settings for old problems. Old sanctions and traditions no longer have authority. The new freedom increases their responsibilities. The scientific spirit of the age challenges their thinking and our rampant materialism threatens their idealism and altruism. In this maze of modern life youth needs guidance. How shall he find his way through these pressing problems of personal, social and religious adjustment?

And the children,—modern education is showing us how early their attitudes are formed; how soon their habits become fixed. The adult also is jogged out of his complacency and told that he still needs to be educated.

And so we have come to look at life as one continuous process of education from birth to death, and in this process religious education is now recognized as fundamental and dominant. This is where the Congregational Publishing Society enters the field. Its task is the production of religious educational literature for all ages and conditions of life. The printed page is its medium, and there is none other more potent. In an advertisement in the Literary Digest recently a prominent paper manufacturer said, "Printing announces the birth of a new style. Printing pictures it, tells who is making it, where it may be had. Printing lends authority to fashion. Printing helped change the Floradora girl into the military, the military girl into the modern." So the printing of religious literature may change the styles of conduct and raise the ideals of life and transform this old world into the likeness of the kingdom which Jesus lived and taught. The printed page reaches an unseen but interested audience. It wins its way, not by the skills of oratory, and the magnetism of personality, but by the truth of its message. Like the leaven in the meal, so the influence of the printed page may permeate all life with higher ideals and better social standards. It may guide and inspire. It may comfort and strengthen. There is no limit to its power; there are no bounds to its outreach.

Through the printed page the Congregational Publishing Society tries to help children, young people, and adults find a high purpose in life, get a vision of spiritual realities—of purity and truth, goodness and kindness, justice and mercy—come to know God and Christ, and discover the way to peace, and power and helpfulness in all the relationships of life.

Something of the character and scope of the literature through which we try to accomplish these aims may be seen in the publications which have recently come from our press.

General Religious Publications

A few years ago Karl Barth was preaching to a small parish in Switzerland. Reports of his teachings spread, and he was soon called to professorships in the Universities of Gottingen and Munster. Today he is one of the most discussed of the German theologians, and many people in Europe believe that Barth has done more to revolutionize religious thinking than any individual since the time of the Reformation. Our recent publication, The Word of God and the Word of Man ($2.25), is a series of his addresses giving the fundamental assumptions of his position. The translation from the German has been made by Douglas Horton and brings to us the true spirit of the original.

How often do we hear the question, What right have missionaries to impose Christian teachings in the lands of other religions? Or, why send money to foreign lands when it is needed at home? Are not missionaries international meddlers and enemies of trade? To help us find our way through such discussions, Dr. Cornelius H. Patton has written a vigorous defense of the modern missionary movement in Foreign Missions Under Fire (cloth $1.00; paper 60c). Another book of special timeliness and international importance is Moslem Mentality by L. Levonian ($.250). Professor Levonian's study is a revelation of the thinking underlying the drastic changes taking place in Turkish civic, social and economic life today.

The search for a religion that will satisfy mind and heart, a religion that will work in this age of materialism and scientific discovery is answered by Charles E. Burton in Finding a Religion to Live By (cloth $1.00; paper 25c). This may be used for personal reading or class study. To meet the devotional needs of the individual or of friendly groups, we have published recently The Great Empire of Silence by Robert Merrill Bartlett ($1.25), and several books of verse by John Oxenham.

The following seven questions which have occupied Christian thinking for centuries are discussed by Dr. Warschauer in a new edition of Jesus' Seven Questions ($2.50); Son of Man or Son of God? Was He Sinless? Did He Work Miracles? Had He Power to Forgive Sins? Is Belief in Him Necessary to Salvation? Did He Rise from the Dead? Did He Die for Us? The New Christian Epic by Albert W. Palmer ($1.50), is a book of sermons in the modern spirit. The first chapter of this book is the Council sermon which Dr. Palmer preached at the Omaha meeting. Throughout the book he points out that this better religion which is "silently taking form in modern life and thought," will meet the spiritual needs of an ever expanding scientific era now in its infancy. Of special significance and interest during this time of farm relief agitation is The Church and the Agricultural Crisis by Edmund de S. Brunner (35c).

For Children and Young People

Margaret Slattery challenges young people to make an honest, penetrating study of themselves, their friends and their religion in her latest book, Important To Me ($1.00). In a companion volume, Two Words (65c), Miss Slattery has brought together stories of the experiences of young people in making every day decisions and shows how such decisions determine character.

Have you ever searched for a completely satisfying story of the life of Jesus for children? Mr. Blanchard did also and could not find what he wanted. And so he began to retell this story for his own fireside group, emphasizing the daring, heroic elements in this life, making Jesus a very real personality, loving and conquering. The result is How One Man Changed the World by Ferdinand Q. Blanchard ($1.50), a story simply told and appealing, rational and yet wonderful. Stories, written by Estella H. Lane to meet similar needs of real children are published under the title, Some True Land Stories ($1.50). Another collection of stories, true stories of Chinese children, is published with interesting black and white illustrations in The Spirit of the Street by Priscilla Holton ($2.00). Becoming acquainted with the girls and boys in this book will help to lay foundations for real friendship between the children of these two lands.

For Teachers, Leaders in Religious Education and Parents

What is happening today in the field of religious education? What are leaders in this field actually thinking and doing? What are their aims? What methods do they employ? In Present-day Trends in Religious Education ($1.50), Erwin L. Shaver discusses such problems as changing methods and the curriculum, the modern use of the Bible, week-day religious education, the vacation school, and training for leadership. In addition to this survey of the present situation, another widely used book by Mr. Shaver helps teachers and church-school officers to attack vigorously the problems in their own school. Programs for Teachers' Meetings (50c), directs the investigation and study of such questions as the best methods of teaching, training in worship, helping pupils to think and study, how to prepare a lesson, the use of the Bible in religious education, education for world friendship, education for Christian social living, parents and the church school, training for better teaching. Missionary Education in the Church by Herbert W. Gates ($1.00) deals with the aim and purpose of missionary education as an integral part of the general program of religious education.

For leaders of young people, Mr. Shaver has written How to Teach Seniors ($1.50). This book will help any leader of youth, both older and younger, in the selection and use of appropriate materials and methods. Three books of special interest to leaders of young people are just coming from the press. (1) Training Young People in Worship, prepared by Mr. Shaver and Mr. Stock. (2) Church Work with Young People by Harry T. Stock, a comprehensive discussion of the church's program for its young people. (3) How to Improve a Young People's Program, by the same author, is intended for the young people themselves.

Parents will be especially interested in two books published anonymously. The first, Problems of a Little Child ($1.25), suggests ways of preventing the fears and meeting the problems common to many children. In Children's Prayers ($1.25), another mother gives us a record of her children's prayers. With deep reverence and inspiration we see the development of the spiritual lives of these children, and we see them unconsciously and naturally give a religious interpretation to everything they experience, such as their parents' love, the beauty of the stars, their appreciation of good and clothes, their happiness in play and their joy in sharing with others. Another type of book for the home, Things to Make by Charlotte Chambers Jones ($1.00), offers a collection of patterns of things which children can easily make—gifts for every member of the family, for the Christmas and Easter seasons, Valentine's Day and other special occasions. Leaders of week-day schools, summer vacation schools, and similar groups will find valuable suggestions here.

Program Materials and Courses of Study

Courses of study based on the International Group and Uniform Lessons are listed below under Periodical Publications. A special section also describes the new Closely Graded Church School Courses. In addition to these special series of lessons, elective courses are published for various departments and classes in the church school. A course of study for the junior department (nine to eleven years of age) for Sunday and week-day use is found in The Golden Rule City by Edna M. Bonser ($2.00). The objective of this course is two-fold: growth in ideals, in right personal conduct and social relationships; also clearer concepts of the character of God and training in worship.

For young people's classes and societies Christian Life Problems by Harry T. Stock (35c), offers a series of discussion outlines. A second volume in this series Problems of Christian Youth (35c), also by Mr. Stock, is based on personal problems and religious questions which are being asked by young people. John L. Lobingier is the author of the third volume in the series, Youth and the World Outlook (35c). These studies deal with certain attitudes, prejudices, and convictions regarding missions, the peoples of other nations, colors and creeds, and the many groups of peoples living under varying social and economic conditions.

Problems and Principles of Social Living by Sidney A. Weston, published by the Graded Press, with teachers' and pupils' books (Paper, teachers' 35c, pupils' 25c; cloth 65c each), is planned to give young people approximately seventeen or eighteen years of age an opportunity to discover principles of conduct to guide them in their social relationships. Problems are considered (a) in relation to each other,—the girl and boy; (b) in relation to the community and its institutions; (c) in relation to industry; (d) in relation to other races; (e) in relation to national and international affairs. The World and Its Problems by the same author, part two in this series, also published by the Graded Press with teachers' and pupils' books (Paper, teachers' 35c, pupils' 25c; cloth 65c each), introduces the student to some of the fundamental religious and social problems of the world in which we live.

The Closely Graded Church School Courses

One of our most important tasks during the past few years has been the revision of the International Graded Lessons. These courses, first published in 1909-1910, have been completely reconstructed and new textbooks written. The Publishing houses of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Congregational Publishing Society comprise the Graded Lesson Syndicate, which published the former series of textbooks, and are now cooperating in the production of the new "Closely Graded Church School Courses."

The general purpose of the new courses is:

To stimulate and guide the developing religious experience of children and young people in such a way that they shall (1) discover and realize for themselves the Christian way of life and (2) attain unto that measure of spiritual growth which belongs to each stage of normal development in Christian character and to effectiveness of tian conduct in all the relationships of life.

Periodical Publications

A complete survey of periodicals and books which we publish for use in the church school will be found in the booklet "What We Are Trying to Do" which was prepared especially for the convenient reference of pastors, parents, directors of religious education, superintendents and teachers. The first section includes an historical statement of the development of our church-school curriculum with a discussion of the aims, outlines and characteristics of the three main series of lessons: (1) the International Uniform Lessons; (2) the International Group Lessons; and (3) the International Graded Lessons. This is followed by a more extended presentation of materials to use in the teaching of children, young people and adults.

We publish nineteen regular periodicals. The work of production and distribution of these publications,—preparation of copy, make-up, proof-reading and seeing through the press, and distribution to the churches—goes on regularly and continuously.

Cooperation with other Agencies

The Publishing Society cooperates with two interdenominational educational agencies, (1) the International Council of Religious Education in which it is represented through its General Manager and associates on the Educational Commission and Central Committee, the Committee of Five, the executive committee, the Board of Trustees and the Professional Advisory Sections. (2) The Leadership Training Publishing Association is made up of editors, publishers and educational secretaries of denominations who wish to cooperate in the publication of leadership training materials.

The Congregationalist

The most interesting and probably the most important feature in the work of The Congregationalist since the last report to the National Council has to do with the merging of The American Missionary with The Congregationalist. It is too early to estimate all the problems incident to this merger and its effects, but some striking conclusions seem already justified.

From the practical standpoint of publicity concerning the homeland enterprise of our churches and national societies and the securing of a large and interested reading public, the merger already seems to have demonstrated its success. Some increase has been attained in annual subscriptions to all weekly issues of The Congregationalist, and, in addition to this, a subscription list of over 11,000 at the time of writing, and apparently rapidly growing, has been built up for the magazine numbers alone. The result is that insofar as this monthly number replaces the original American Missionary Magazine, a reading constituency equal to that of The American Missionary has been attained almost at the very outset, and as the subscriptions to the new monthly numbers have been secured at double the former price and the present list is on a much sounder basis of fully paid-up subscriptions, it would seem that, without losing numerically, the magazine number under the merger has secured a more substantial support in actual readers.

The financial aspect of the merger does not enter into my province except as it bears upon matters of editorial detail and policy, which it does to a much greater extent than in relation to the other weekly numbers of The Congregationalist. The type of magazine, its format, the nature and quality of the articles, and particularly the extent and form of the illustrations, all have to be determined with some consideration for the resources available. The policy thus far has involved rather larger financial latitude than was contemplated by the action of the Home Boards of Minneapolis, last year by which the merger was determined. This has been with the sanction of the various Administrative Committees in recognition of the feeling that larger resources were necessary to make a creditable magazine.

There is always the possibility of adjusting editorial policies, in some degree at least, to financial exigencies. As experience in connection with the merger increases, the denomination may have to face some readjustments and determinations of policy for the future. Meanwhile, experience thus far in connection with the merger strongly confirms the experience already enforced in the work of The Congregationalist, and in almost the entire field of religious journalism, making it evident that the time has not yet arrived when a paper of a standard worthy to be the organ of the Congregational fellowship can be produced without reasonable subsidies. If the subsidies needed for The American Missionary have been somewhat reduced through its issue as a monthly number of The Congregationalist, the financial situation affecting The Congregationalist has not been materially altered, and probably has been made more acute. It is my hope from an editorial point of view that our Congregational fellowship will face this situation frankly, recognizing as heretofore the elemental need and value of a weekly like The Congregationalist, as a symbol of the national unity of the fellowship and as the most powerful factor in undergirding our entire national and world-wide work. The recognition of The Congregationalist as performing this function becomes increasingly apparent. No denominational agency carries on its work without criticism, and a work conducted so fully in the glare of the limelight as an enterprise of journalism invites such criticism to the fullest extent.

The time has seemed psychologically appropriate for a great advance, and already there has been a new access of support. Congregationalists, however, are still very far from the point where they ought to be in supporting the chief organ of their national life and fellowship. When one compares the proportion of subscribers to members for any of our Congregational religious periodicals with the proportion of subscribers to members for the periodicals of certain other more highly organized denominations of more definitely sectarian groups, one realizes that our freedom has not always involved the acceptance of responsibility and privilege. Yet, can one doubt that the effective unifying and organizing for intelligent spiritual common ends and enterprises depends very largely, even in a fellowship such as ours, upon a constant and adequate medium of information and discussion? A great leader of our church life said a few years ago that when he was in the pastorate he considered the coming of The Congregationalist into a home as equal to a pastoral call a week. That is the value of an organ like The Congregationalist in its local aspect. But even that great service does not quite suggest the value that would accrue to the whole range of our national and world-wide work if we could come anywhere near the ideal of placing The Congregationalist in every Congregational home. We make continued appeal to the Congregational fellowship for a vision of such an ideal and for more definitely organized activity leading to its attainment.

REPORT OF THE ANNUITY FUND FOR CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS

The emergence of Retirement Pensions from the casual field of charity into the more worthy and consistent field of carefully ordered provision for old age annuities is one of the most interesting and encouraging features of our complex economic and social life.

The contrast in the situation is extraordinary. Despair has given way to hope, and ministers throughout the United States in practically all the strong denominations are cheered on their way of service by the assurance that their old age will not be comfortless.

Our own beloved communion has shown a sincere purpose to make the age of its ministry more tolerable, and we have proceeded about the business in a truly characteristic fashion. Congregationalism heeds quite exactly the admonition of Alexander Pope:

“Be not the first by whom the new are tried—
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.”

We have walked a middle way in this as in all things. Consequently while we are not open to the bitterest reproaches for an absolute failure we are, unhappily, far from having attained a Christian, or even moral, goal.

On January 1, 1929, there were 2,472 members of the Annuity Fund, of whom 446 were annuitants, including 309 ministers, 135 widows and 2 orphans. Out of the total membership of 2,472, 1,373 were under the Original Plan, and 1,099 under the Expanded Plan. The Honor Roll of Churches (meaning those that share in the payment of the ministers' dues) bore the names of 675 churches.

The resignation of Dr. Charles S. Mills as the General Secretary of the Ministerial Boards, which took effect on October 1, 1928, has been commented on in the Annual Report of the Annuity Fund and in the actions of the Board of Directors of the Home Boards. No report to the National Council would, however, be adequate if it did not make mention of the wise, courageous, sympathetic and wide-visioned service rendered by Dr. Mills during his incumbency of the office of General Secretary. His brethren in the ministry for whom he has labored with such entire unselfishness will forever honor him and be grateful for his service.

The statistical record of the biennium, 1927 and 1928, is of interest and value. A summary is presented herewith.

The most noteworthy event in the financial history of the Annuity Fund during the biennium was the proposal made, in October 1928, by Mrs. Arthur Dwight Dana and her sons, William D. Dana and Arthur Dwight Dana, and made effective January 20, 1929, of a gift of $100,000 to the Annuity Fund, the income to be used for ten years for the work of the Congregational Board of Ministerial Relief. The further provisions of this noble gift are of special interest to the members of the Annuity Fund.

After the expiration of ten years, the income shall be used and applied by the Annuity Fund to the extent in each year that its Board of Trustees deem necessary for the benefit of its members as may be in special need and distress, irrespective of the amount that may have been paid by or for them as dues.

Any balance of income not so used in any year shall be used and applied in such manner as the Board of Trustees shall from time to time at their discretion deem to be for the greatest benefit of the members generally.

The Annuity Fund will begin to receive the income from this noteworthy gift at a time when the drain on the Supplementary Reserve will be most severe.

The Annuity Fund was also very fortunate in the receipt in 1928 of a noble legacy from the Estate of Mr. Henry S. Chapman amounting to $43,013.38 net. It is of great encouragement to the Trustees of the Annuity Fund that this Fund, which does its work unobtrusively and lacks some of the picturesque features of other philanthropic or missionary appeals, has been enriched in this generous way by thoughtful people who understand the essential character of the work done by the Annuity Fund.

The Trustees of the Annuity Fund regret to say that at the present time the Supplementary Reserves to which reference has been made are far below the amount required according to the projection of the Actuary. At the close of 1928 these Reserves lacked $194,588 of what would have been on hand if the projected requirements computed in 1922 had been received each year. In 1928 the net income received through the apportionment for this purpose was $39,344, which is $10,656 short of the required amount. The Trustees of the Annuity Fund can be counted upon to administer the assets of the Fund with the utmost fidelity and with exemplary prudence; but it is the plain duty of the churches to provide, year by year, that portion of the total reserves which is requisite to meet the future annuity demands.

Pilgrim Memorial Fund

Total number of subscriptions, excluding cancellations, December 31, 1928, was 97,757, aggregating $6,006,185. The gross collections cumulative to December 31, 1928, were $5,457,171; net collections, $4,939,802; gross collections during biennium, January 1, 1927 to December 31, 1928, $62,453; net collections $48,629. Of these net collections, $12,892 was received in 1928. At the end of 1928 there remained unpaid 12,805 subscriptions aggregating $549,014. This is in addition to $500,147 in cancellations, or a total of $1,049,160 either cancelled or unpaid out of total subscriptions of $6,506,332. It is to be hoped that considerable payments may yet be made on these delinquent subscriptions. The collection of the remaining subscriptions is becoming increasingly difficult. It is, however, the purpose of the Trustees of the Annuity Fund to endeavor to collect unpaid subscriptions when the cost of such effort is not too disproportionate. In order to bring the account of the Pilgrim Memorial Fund up to date the following items are submitted: expense of organization, $19,571; campaign and field expenses, $190,901; administration and collection, $304,967; transfers, $1,930; total, $517,369.

REPORT OF THE CORPORATION FOR THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

The Corporation is organized under the laws of Connecticut and consists of fifteen members elected by the National Council, in addition to the Moderator and Secretary, ex officio.

The functions of the Corporation are to hold and administer trust funds on behalf of the National Council or other Congregational interests.

To the present time the largest task of the Corporation is the administration of the Pilgrim Memorial Fund as the foundation for the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers. There are, however, several smaller funds in trust with the Corporation.

It is seen that the chief responsibility of the Corporation is to select dependable officers, especially a Financial Secretary and a Finance Committee charged with the power to invest and reinvest funds held in trust.

The Corporation has given faithful attention to the reports of its responsible officers and committees; provided careful audits and adequate bonds, and has given scrupulous attention to legal details.

The Corporation holds four regular meetings annually, the attendance at the meetings since the last Council having ranged from six to nine, with an average of eight.

It is to be observed that for the first time legacies have appeared in the funds of the Corporation to be held for the National Council, namely, the fund for the Commission on Evangelism from the Chapman estate, and that from the George L. Dunham fund, regarding which the testator expressed the wish that it might be kept as a permanent fund but did not make this obligatory.

For the first time also the Executive Committee of the Council has made the Corporation its trustee for reserve funds, which means funds which are held during the low demand against the time of high demand, as for example, in the payment of mileage, biennial meeting expenses, Year Book costs, and the like.

It will be observed that the total assets of $5,277,915.88, which compares with $5,081,239.46 in 1926, and that the total principal of the Pilgrim Memorial Fund has grown from $4,889,555.06 to $4,937,952.72, while the reserve fund from profit on sales of securities has increased from $132,979.50 to $197,617.01.

REPORT OF THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF MINISTERIAL RELIEF

Statistics are proverbially dry. They do, however have value as landmarks of progress. The traveler may not find milestones a sustaining diet, but he discovers that they are useful on a journey. Just at the present time statistics have an unusual significance in regard to the Board of Relief. Since the last meeting of the National Council, Dr. Charles S. Mills, for eight years secretary of the Ministerial Boards, has resigned the office which he had filled with distinction and effectiveness. In the minutes of the Home Boards will be found resolutions adopted by the Directors in appreciation of the service rendered by Dr. Mills with characteristic breadth of vision and elevation of purpose. The retirement of Dr. Mills and the assumption of office by a new secretary offer an opportune occasion to review the progressive expansion of the work of caring for our aged ministers. In view of the fact that Dr. William A. Rice became Secretary of the Congregational Board of Ministerial Relief November 1, 1902, Dr. Charles S. Mills, General Secretary of the Ministerial Boards October 1, 1920, and Dr. Lewis T. Reed, October 1, 1928, the following tabulation gives statistical data concerning the national Board of Relief for the calendar years named.

	1902	1920	1928
Number of pensioners during the year	75	383	750
Income from all sources	$ 21,625	$ 155,578	$ 310,587
Permanent funds	130,000	1,290,325	1,467,889
Payments to beneficiaries	7,275	85,694	306,356
(by C. B. M. R. alone)

It should be added that not a little of the increase between 1920 and 1928 is due to agreements entered into between the Congregational Board of Ministerial Relief and State Relief Societies whereby relief formerly given by the latter is now administered by the C. B. M. R., in return for which the C. B. M. R. receives the contributions from those states. The masterly leadership of Dr. Mills progressively and happily brought the relief agencies in Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Wisconsin and Iowa to the view that relief could be given more equably and effectively by the National Board than it could be by a number of State Boards whose grants would inevitably vary with the varying prosperity of the states. Something of the readjustment of work between the National Board and the State Societies is indicated by the following figures:

	1920	1928
Aid given by C. B. M. R.	$ 85,694	$ 206,356
Aid given by State Societies	53,794	67,915
Total	$139,488	$ 274,271
Number of grants, including regular, Christmas and emergency by C. B. M. R.	383	750
Ditto, by State Societies	287	266
Total	670	1,016
Net total after deducting names appearing more than once	603	906
The record of the biennium is as follows (including national and state societies):
	1927	1928
Grants
Annual Grants	$ 205,881	$ 212,988
Christmas Remembrance	36,185	38,323
Emergency Grants	27,052	22,960
Total	$ 269,118	$ 274,271
Receipts
Churches and Individuals, etc.	$ 113,738	$ 113,150
Christmas Fund	68,997	68,437
Interest from Invested Funds	94,079	95,378
Legacies and Matured Conditional Gifts	67,879	98,922
Total	$ 344,693	$ 375,887
Assets	$2,037,217	$2,168,672

Another noteworthy feature of the biennium has been the increase in both the number and amount of conditional gifts, which in 1927 and 1928 amounted to $64,992 from 32 donors to be compared with $19,400 from 7 donors in the previous biennium. This sharp increase both in the amount of the gifts and the number of donors is undoubtedly the result of the readjustment in the rates of interest paid on conditional gifts. The Board of Relief bids fair to be a great gainer by this wise and justifiable change.

The biennium has been notable also for the continued evidence of a deep interest in the welfare of our retired ministers on the part of our well-to-do people. Late in 1928 Mrs. Arthur Dwight Dana and her two sons announced their purpose to give to the Annuity Fund the sum of $100,000 as a memorial to Arthur Dwight Dana, the income of this gift to be used for ten years by the Board of Relief for its corporate purposes. In 1928 the Board of Relief received two large legacies amounting to $74,219 from the estates of Royal C. Burckes and Henry S. Chapman. The latter gift was notably the result of the wise advice of one of our most honored ministers, and is an indication of the results that may be achieved for wise Christian philanthropy when pastors are both interested and informed. In other cases generous hearted people have, to the knowledge of the officers of the Board named the Board of Relief as beneficiary in their wills. We may expect that within a comparatively brief period the permanent funds of the Board of Relief will be greatly increased.

The Christmas Fund remains one of the great triumphs of our Congregational benevolence. The Christmas Fund of 1927 amounted to $68,997 and for 1928, $68,437. From this Fund was paid in these two years $124,520 to pensioners in the form of Christmas and emergency checks. Inasmuch as the question is often asked: "Are these Christmas gifts over and above the pension?" It should be stated that they are distinctly extras given in addition to the regular pension.

During the biennium the average grants to pensioners have been as follows:

	1927	1928
Average grant—ministers	$328	$330
Average Christmas check—ministers	53	58
Total	$381	$388
Average grant — widows	$249	$255
Average Christmas check — widows	42	46
	$291	$301

As the years pass there comes inevitably a change in the relative proportion of the work of the C. B. M. R. and the Annuity Fund to the whole work of caring for our aged and disabled ministers and their widows. There also emerges a somewhat clearer view of what will constitute the permanent and essential work of ministerial relief. The Annuity Fund will gradually make provision for those ministers who have a normal career in the ministry, men who join the fund early, preach with reasonable acceptability, have fair health and are retired at either sixty-five or sixty-eight years of age. For this class of ministers, even when their savings would, apart from the Annuity Fund, be very small, the Board of Relief has a decreasing responsibility. At the present time, however, two classes are unhappily excepted from this normal group: first, those who are already far along in their ministry and whose savings provide almost no protection against the demands of old age; second, those who fall ill, and whose widows and children are left with few resources. The fact that during 1928 the National and State Boards made regular annual grants to 823 different persons and 112 emergency grants (a total of 935) indicates the extent of this work of relief.

ANNUITIES FOR UNORDAINED WORKERS

(Tentative Plan)

The question of providing annuities for the unordained missionaries and other workers of the Congregational churches, boards and institutions received consideration at the National Council of 1925 (see pages 243-4 of the Minutes for the report of the Annuity Fund and pages 37-8 for the recommendations adopted by the National Council). It was considered also at the National Council of 1927 (see pages 143-4 of the Minutes for the report of the Annuity Fund and page 196 for the recommendations adopted by the National Council).

At the annual meeting of the Directors of the Congregational Home Boards, January 23, 1929, the Actuary of the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers submitted, by invitation, a statement outlining a plan of annuities for unordained workers. As a result of this statement and the subsequent discussion, the following vote was taken:

"That the Directors of the Home Boards in joint session recommend to the Commission on Missions that the officers of the Annuity Fund be asked to prepare for submission to and approval by the National Council in May, 1929, a detailed plan for the pensioning of unordained workers of the Congregational churches, with the request that the constituent societies and agencies make plans with a view to placing their employees under the pension plan if and when put into operation."

Under like circumstances the Prudential Committee of the American Board also voted to recommend to the Commission on Missions that the officers of the Annuity Fund be asked to prepare a detailed plan for the pensioning of unordained workers for submission to and approval by the National Council of 1929.

The Commission on Missions on January 23, 1929, adopted the following resolution:

"That the Commission on Missions approve the recommendation of the Directors of the Home Boards that the officers of the Annuity Fund be asked to prepare, for submission to and approval by the National Council in May, 1929, a detailed plan for the pensioning of unordained workers of the Congregational churches, with the request that the constituent societies and agencies make plans with a view to placing their employees under the pension plan, if and when put into operation."

In accordance with the above, the officers of the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers are pleased to submit to the National Council the following recommendations:

Organization and Administration

I. Organization: That the officers and trustees of the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers take the necessary steps to secure a charter under the laws of the State of New Jersey for an annuity fund for unordained workers of Congregational churches, boards, societies, institutions, incorporated or unincorporated, and their successors (hereafter referred to as Congregational organizations), similar to that obtained for the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers under an act entitled "An Act to incorporate associations not for pecuniary profit."

II. Title: That the title of the corporation be THE CONGREGATIONAL ANNUITY FUND FOR UNORDAINED WORKERS.

III. Purpose: That the purpose of the corporation shall be to enable Congregational organizations, (hereafter referred to as the employer), to provide for the unordained workers in their employ, annuities payable in the event of retirement on account of age or disability.

IV. Members: The members shall be unordained persons in the employ of Congregational organizations who have applied for membership and have been accepted, and by whom and upon whose behalf the member's dues and the employer's dues have been or are being paid.

V. Administration: (1) That the members of THE CONGREGATIONAL ANNUITY FUND FOR UNORDAINED WORKERS (hereafter referred to as the Congregational Annuity Fund), in annual meeting, shall elect a Board of Trustees who, in turn, shall elect officers for the ensuing year.

(2) That the number of Trustees shall be nine, all of whom shall be citizens of the United States over twenty-one years of age; shall be in ecclesiastical relationship with the Congregational Churches of the United States of America, or with the denomination in which the Congregational churches shall have been merged or consolidated, and a majority of whom shall be citizens of New Jersey.

(3) That the Trustees shall be selected from among eligible persons whose names have been approved by the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States, or its successor: provided, however, that the persons constituting the initial Board of Trustees shall be the then existing Trustees of the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers.

(4) That the corporation shall be located in Jersey City in the County of Hudson and the State of New Jersey but its principal business shall be conducted in the city, county and state of New York in the office of the Annuity Fund for Congregational Ministers.

General Plan

Introduction: It is recognized that the several Congregational organizations may find it necessary to make modifications in the GENERAL PLAN outlined in Sections VI, VII and VIII or to make special provisions, on account of the special needs of their own groups of employees. It is expected, however, that only such modifications of the GENERAL PLAN shall be made as are necessary and that such plans or modifications shall recognize and embody the fundamental principles outlined in the GENERAL PLAN and shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Trustees of the Congregational Annuity Fund. Such modifications may include the adoption of a lower minimum retirement age or a higher maximum; or the policy of not depositing the employer's dues until the employee shall have completed a specified number of years, such as three or five; or until the employee shall have attained a specified age, such as thirty years; or special arrangements as to credits on account of prior service.

VI. Member's Dues: (1) That payments, to be known as Member's Dues, be made by each unordained worker who becomes a member of the Congregational Annuity Fund.

(2) That the cash salary be the basis of the dues except that, where a house is furnished by the employer free of charge, a fifteen per cent addition be made to the cash salary; and where board is furnished by the employer without charge, a sum equivalent to the value of the board be added to the cash salary.

(3) That the member's dues be fixed at three per cent of the above salary basis, payable annually or in semi-annually, quarterly or monthly instalments.

(4) That the member's dues be credited to his individual account and be increased by interest additions.

(5) That the accumulations of the member's dues be applied as follows:

A. Upon retirement of the member on account of age, such accumulations shall be applied towards securing an age annuity, provided that,

(a) The minimum retirement age shall be sixty-five.

(b) The maximum retirement age shall be sixty-eight.

(c) In lieu of the Single Life Annuity provided herein the retiring member may elect, as an option, a joint Life and Survivorship Annuity for a reduced amount of annuity but with sixty per cent of the annuity continuing to the widow or other designated beneficiary.

B. Upon retirement of the member on account of total and permanent disability before attaining age sixty-five, such accumulations shall be applied towards providing a disability annuity.

C. In the event of withdrawal from service, before retirement on account of age or disability, the dues paid by the member may be left to accumulate with interest additions toward providing an age annuity on attaining age sixty-five. If, however, the withdrawing member demands the return of his dues, they shall be returned with interest additions at a rate not exceeding four per cent, and with no further claims against the Congregational Annuity Fund.

D. In the event of death before retirement on account of age or disability, the dues deposited by the member, with the interest additions, shall be applied towards providing annuity benefits for the widow or minor children, but if the member leaves no widow or minor child, then the dues deposited by the member shall be paid, without the interest additions, to the beneficiary designated by the member, or to his legal representative.

VII. Employer's Dues: (1) That annual payments, to be known as Employer's Dues, be made by the employer of a member of the Congregational Annuity Fund.

(2) That the salary basis be reckoned as in the case of the member's dues.

(3) That the employer's dues be fixed at three per cent of the salary basis, payable as provided in Section VI (3).

(4) That the employer's dues be administered on a group basis to be applied as follows:

A. Towards providing supplemental disability annuities payable upon retirement before attaining age sixty-five, as a result of total and permanent disability from a cause having its inception after one year of membership in the Congregational Annuity Fund. Receipt of the supplemental disability annuity is contingent upon the payment of all dues by and on behalf of the member.

Note: The disability annuity provided in the foregoing paragraph shall be supplemental to the disability annuity provided by the accumulation of the member's dues, together with the annuity provided by the accumulations from the allocations of the employer's dues, so as to bring the combined annuity from these sources up to a minimum which may be fixed from year to year by the Board of Trustees.

It is hoped that at the outset the minimum disability annuity will be $500 but in no case is the disability annuity to exceed forty per cent of the average salary of the member during the last three years. If the period of membership is less than three years, then the average salary would be based upon the salaries of the shorter period.

B. Towards paying expenses of administration.

C. The portion of the employer's dues not required for disability annuity benefits and for expenses of administration, and the allocation of interest credits released through the death or withdrawal of members, shall be apportioned and allocated at the close of each year to those members whose full dues during such year have been paid by themselves and their employers. The apportionment shall be made on a pro rata basis, that is, in proportion to the total amount of dues paid by the member during such year.

All allocations shall be credited to the individual accounts and be increased by interest additions and applied towards providing age or disability annuities upon retirement, supplemental to those provided by the accumulations of the member's dues, as provided in Section VI, A and B.

In the event of withdrawal from service, if the member's dues are left to accumulate with interest additions, as provided in Section VI, (5) C, the allocations would also remain to the credit of the member, and be increased by interest additions but without further allocations. If, however, the member's dues are withdrawn, the allocations shall be released and added to the funds of the year held for the next general allocation, as provided in this Section (4) C, first paragraph.

VIII. Annuity credits on account of prior service:

(1) That in the case of present employees (that is, those who are in service on the date when the employer begins to participate), the regular annuity provided by the total accumulations of member's dues and the allocations from the employer's dues shall be supplemented upon retirement by an additional prior service annuity so as to bring the total retirement annuity as nearly as possible up to the basis of the retirement annuity that would have been provided for the member had the retirement system been in operation during the member's entire period of service.

146 ANNUNITY FUND FOR UNORDAINED WORKERS

(2) That the entire cost of the prior service annuity shall be borne by the employer.

(3) That the method of financing the cost of the prior service annuities for its own group of employees be left to the particular employer with the suggestion that it be funded over a series of years, inasmuch as the amount required to fund the entire cost of the prior service annuities would be, in all likelihood, greater than any one employer could finance at one time.

(4) That in the matter of distributing the cost of financing the prior service annuities over a series of years, three methods are open:

A. That of paying currently the amount of the current prior service annuity payments.

B. That of depositing with the Congregational Annuity Fund the actuarial equivalent of the prior service annuity at the time of the retirement of the member.

C. That of ascertaining the entire cost of the prior service annuities and financing it over a fixed period of years, say ten or fifteen.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

The Congregational Churches of the United States, by delegates in National Council assembled, reserving all the rights and cherished memories belonging to this organization under its former constitution, and declaring the steadfast allegiance of the churches composing the Council to the faith which our fathers confessed, which from age to age has found its expression in the historic creeds of the Church universal and of this communion, and affirming our loyalty to the basic principles of our representative democracy, hereby set forth the things most surely believed among us concerning faith, polity, and fellowship:

Faith

We believe in God the Father, infinite in wisdom, goodness and love; and in Jesus Christ, his Son, our Lord and Saviour, who for us and our salvation lived and died and rose again and liveth evermore; and in the Holy Spirit, who taketh of the things of Christ and revealeth them to us, renewing, comforting, and inspiring the souls of men. We are united in striving to know the will of God as taught in the Holy Scriptures, and in our purpose to walk in the ways of the Lord, made known or to be made known to us. We hold it to be the mission of the Church of Christ to proclaim the gospel to all mankind, exalting the worship of the one true God and laboring for the progress of knowledge, the promotion of justice, the reign of peace, and the realization of human brotherhood. Depending, as did our fathers, upon the continued guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead us into all truth, we work and pray for the transformation of the world into the kingdom of God; and we look with faith for the triumph of righteousness and the life everlasting.

Polity

We believe in the freedom and responsibility of the individual soul, and the right of private judgment. We hold to the autonomy of the local church and its independence of all ecclesiastical control. We cherish the fellowship of the churches, united in district, state, and national bodies, for council and co-operation in matters of common concern.

The Wider Fellowship

While affirming the liberty of our churches, and the validity of our ministry, we hold to the unity and catholicity of the Church of Christ, and will unite with all its branches in hearty co-operation; and will earnestly seek, so far as in us lies, that the prayer of our Lord for his disciples may be answered, that they all may be one.

United in support of these principles, the Congregational Churches in National Council assembled agree in the adoption of the following Constitution:

Article I.—Name

The name of this body is the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States.

Article II.—Purpose

The purpose of the National Council is to foster and express the substantial unity of the Congregational churches in faith, polity, and work; to consult upon and devise measures and maintain agencies for the promotion of their common interests; to co-operate with any corporation or body under control of or affiliated with the Congregational churches or any of them; and to do and to promote the work of the Congregational churches of the United States in their national, international and interdenominational relations.

Article III.—Members

1. Delegates. (a) The churches in each District Association shall be represented by one delegate. Each association having more than ten churches shall be entitled to elect one additional delegate for each additional ten churches or major fraction (i.e., six or more) thereof. The churches in each State Conference shall be represented by two delegates, one of whom shall be a woman.

Each conference having churches whose aggregate membership is more than ten thousand shall be entitled to elect two additional delegates for each additional ten thousand members or major fraction (i.e., 5,001 or more) thereof, one-half of whom shall be women. A state having a state organization but no district organizations, or a state having district organizations but no state organization may send delegates on the dual basis of one for every ten churches and one two for every ten thousand members, as above set forth.

(b) Delegates shall be divided, as nearly equally as practicable, between ministers and laymen.

(c) The Secretary and the Treasurer shall be members, ex officio, of the Council.

(d) Any delegate who shall remove his residence from the geographical bounds of the conference or association by which he has been elected to the Council shall be deemed by the fact of that removal to have resigned his membership in the Council, and the conference or association may proceed to fill the unexpired term by election.

2. Honorary Members. Former moderators, associate moderators and assistant moderators of the Council, ministers serving the churches entertaining the Council, persons selected as preachers or to prepare papers, or to serve upon committees or commissions chosen by the Council, missionaries present who are in the service of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and have been not less than seven years in that service, executive officers of national missionary societies whose scope of responsibility is co-extensive with the nation, together with one delegate each from such theological seminaries and colleges as are recognized by the Council, may be enrolled as honorary members and shall be entitled to all privileges of members in the meeting of the Council except those of voting and initiation of business. Any person appointed by a national missionary society as a corporate member shall have the right to the floor when matters affecting that Society are under discussion.

3. Corresponding Members. The Council shall not increase its own voting membership, but members of other denominations, present by invitation or representing their denominations, representatives of Congregational bodies in other lands, and other persons present who represent important interest, or have rendered distinguished services, may by vote, be made corresponding members, and entitled to the courtesy of the floor.

4. Term of Membership. The term of delegates shall be our years. Elections to fill vacancies shall be for the remainder of the unexpired term.

The term of a member shall begin at the opening of the next stated meeting of the Council after his election, and shall expire with the opening of the second stated meeting of the Council thereafter. He shall be a member of any intervening special meeting of the Council.

5. Alternates. Appointing bodies may elect alternates, and any alternate specifically designated by an appointing body, who may be present and seated at any Council meeting in the absence of his principal, becomes the regular delegate of that body, displacing the principal first appointed.

6. Election of Non-Residents. While removal from the bounds of the appointing body causes forfeiture of membership in the Council, this fact shall not be construed as forbidding the election of non-residents by an appointing body.

7. Filling Vacancies. Each appointing body may, at its discretion designate the method of filling vacancies in its delegation. Unless another method has been adopted, the Council will recognize such substitutes from Conference or Association as may be designated by the remaining delegates from such Conference or Association or (in the absence of such designation) by the total delegation from within the bounds of the state concerned, these substitutes to be certified to the Credentials Committee by certificate of a chairman chosen by such delegates.

Provided, however, that in case of the formal resignation of a Principal and his Alternate before the opening day of the Council, a regular delegate may be elected, by such method as each Conference or Association may adopt, to whom shall be given usual credentials and he shall be enrolled as other regular delegates.

No substitute shall be enrolled within twenty-four hours after the opening of any meeting of the Council, nor within forty-eight hours except upon assurance of an actual vacancy.

Commissions are expected to report at the next meeting following their appointment, and no commission other than the Commission on Missions and those designated by the Council as permanent Commissions shall continue beyond the next stated meeting of the Council except by special vote of the Council.

3. No commission shall incur expense except as authorized by the Council, or its Executive Committee.

4. Any member in good standing of a Congregational church is eligible for services on any commission or ad interim committee.

6. At least one-third of the members of every continued commission shall be persons who have not been members of it for the preceding term, and at least one-third of the members of every commission shall be laymen.

7. There shall be in each biennium at least one meeting of Chairmen of Commissions with the Executive Committee of the National Council, at which time reports of progress from each Commission shall be made to the Executive Committee and plans pursued under its general direction, except when the powers of the Commissions are already defined by the Council.

X.—Congregational National Societies

With the consent of our National Missionary Societies, whose approval is a necessary preliminary, and whose constitutional right to withdraw such consent by due process is recognized, the following shall define the relation of these societies to the National Council.

The foreign missionary work of the Congregational churches of the United States shall be carried on under the auspices of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and the home missionary work of these churches, for the present under the auspices of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, the American Missionary Association, the Congregational Education Society, the Congregational Church Building Society, the Congregational Sunday-School Extension Society and the Congregational Publishing Society, hereinafter called the Home Societies.

1. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

This Board shall be the agency of the Congregational churches for the extension of Christ's kingdom abroad.

a. Membership. The voting membership of the American Board shall consist, in addition to the present life members, of two classes of persons. (a) One class shall be composed of the members of the National Council, who shall be deemed nominated as corporate members of the American Board by their election and certification as members of the said National Council, said nominations to be ratified and the persons so named elected by the American Board. Their terms as corporate members of the American Board shall end, in each case, when they cease to be members of the National Council. (b) There may also be chosen by the American Board two hundred and twenty-five corporate members-at-large, at least one-third of whom shall be women. The said two hundred and twenty-five corporate members-at-large shall be chosen in two equal sections, and so chosen that the term of each section shall be ultimately four years, one section being chosen every second year at the meeting in connection with the meeting of the National Council. No new voting members, other than herein provided, shall be created.

b. Officers and Committees. The officers and committees of the American Board shall be such as the Board itself may from time to time determine.

c. Meetings. Regular meetings of the American Board shall be held annually. That falling in the same year in which the National Council holds its meetings shall be held in connection with the meeting of said Council. Meetings in other years shall be held at such time and place as the Board may determine. Important business, especially such as involves extensive modifications of policy, shall, so far as possible, be reserved for consideration in those meetings held in connection with the meeting of the National Council.

d. Reports. It shall be the duty of the American Board to make a full and accurate report of its condition and work to the National Council at each stated meeting of that body.

2. The Home Societies. These Societies shall be the agencies of the Congregational churches for the extension of Christ's kingdom in the United States.

a. Membership. The voting membership of the several home societies shall consist, in addition to such existing life members and other members of the society in question as may be regarded as legally necessary, of two classes of persons.

(a) One class shall be composed of the members of the National Council so long as they remain members of said Council.

(b) There may also be chosen corporate members-at-large by the said societies, in the following numbers, viz.: by the Congregational Home Missionary Society, ninety; by the American Missionary Association, sixty; by the Congregational Church Building Society, by the Congregational Education Society, by the Congregational Publishing Society, and The Congregational Sunday School Extension Society, thirty-six each. The said corporate members-at-large shall be chosen by each of the said societies in two equal sections and so chosen that the term of each section shall be ultimately four years, one section being chosen every second year at the meeting held in connection with the meeting of the National Council.

b. Officers and Committees. The officers and committees of the several home societies shall be such as the societies themselves may from time to time determine.

c. Meetings. Regular meetings of the Home Societies shall be held annually. Those falling in the same year in which the National Council holds its meetings shall be held in connection with the meeting of said Council. Meetings in other years shall be held at such times and places as the societies themselves may determine. Important business, especially such as involves extensive modifications of policy, shall so far as possible, be reserved for consideration in those meetings held in connection with the meeting of the National Council.

d. Reports. It shall be the duty of each of the Home Societies to make a full and accurate report of its condition and work to the National Council at each stated meeting of that body.

XI.—The Commission on Missions

1. On nomination of the Committee on Nominations, the National Council shall elect nine persons, at least one-third of the nine being women, who together with the Moderator and the Secretary of the National Council, the elected members of the Prudential Committee of the American Board, and the Board of Thirty-six Directors of the Home Boards shall constitute a Commission on Missions. The Secretary of the National Council shall be the General Secretary of the Commission. The Commission may invite to sit with it without vote such Secretaries of the Societies as it may deem useful to its deliberations.

At least once each year the chief executive officer of each State Conference shall be invited to sit with the Commission and participate in its discussions without vote.

2. Members. The members-at-large of the Commission on Missions shall serve for four years and after eight years' continuous service shall be ineligible for re-election until after two years shall have passed.

Unpaid officers of any of the missionary societies of the churches shall be eligible to this Commission, but no paid officer or employee of a missionary society shall be eligible. The Commission shall choose its own Chairman, and have power to fill any vacancy in its own membership until the next stated meeting of the Council.

3. Duties. While the Commission on Missions shall not be charged with the details of the administration of the several missionary and educational organizations, it shall be its duty to consider the work of the organizations named above, to prevent duplication of activities, to effect all possible economies of administration, to correlate the work of the several organizations, together with their publicity and promotional activities, so as to secure the maximum of efficiency with the minimum of expense. It shall have the right to examine the annual budgets of the several organizations and have access to their books and records. It may freely give its advice to the said organizations regarding problems involved in their work, and it shall make recommendations to the several organizations when, in its judgment, their work can be made more efficient or economical. It shall make report of its actions to the National Council at each stated meeting of that body, and present to said Council such recommendations as it may deem wise for the furtherance of the efficiency and economical administration of the several organizations.

The Commission is authorized to establish such office and to employ such staff as may be necessary for the economical and efficient conduct of its work.

4. Expenses. The members of the Commission on Missions shall serve without salary. The necessary expenses of the Commission, including the expenses of its voting members, not otherwise provided for, shall be paid from the treasury of the Commission on Missions. All bills for payment shall be certified by the Chairman of the Commission or such other responsible officer as the Commission shall designate.

5. Budget. The budget of the Commission shall be provided by the Societies from the contributions of the Churches as approved by the representatives of the churches in the National Council, and on a scale of assessment determined by the Commission on the basis of the apportionment percentages. The budget should include in addition to the requirements of the Commission provision for a miscellaneous fund to meet the fair share of the denomination in interdenominational projects and minor calls upon the denomination.

6. Survey Committee. A survey committee of the National Council, but reporting to the Commission on Missions, consisting of twelve members, at least one-third of whom shall be women, shall be elected for terms of four years, one-half at each biennial meeting of the National Council on nomination by the Nominating Committee of the National Council. In 1927 six shall be elected for two years and six for four years. No member shall be elected for more than two successive terms. This committee shall be chosen from those outside of the Prudential Committee of the American Board, of the members of the Board of Directors of the Home Board, of the Administrative Committees of the Home Boards and of the salaried officary of the denomination.

It shall be the duty of this committee to study the relative needs of the societies and states and recommend the apportionment percentages to the Commission on Missions.

XII.—Devotional and Other Services

1. In the sessions of the National Council, half an hour every morning shall be given to devotional services, and the daily sessions shall be opened with prayer and closed with prayer or singing. The evening sessions shall ordinarily be given to meetings of a specially religious rather than of a business character.

2. The Council will seek to promote in its sessions a distinctly spiritual uplift, and to this end will arrange programs for the presentation of messages for the general public attending such gatherings. But the first concern of the Council shall be the transaction of the business of the denomination so far as that shall be intrusted to it by the churches; and the Council will meet in separate or executive session during the delivery of addresses whenever the necessity of the business of the Council may appear to require it.

XIII.—Time Limitations

No person shall occupy more than half an hour in reading any paper or report, and no speaker upon any motion or resolution, or upon any paper read, shall occupy more than ten minutes, without the unanimous consent of the Council.

In case of discussion approaching the time limit set for it, the Moderator may announce the limitation of speeches to less than ten minutes, subject to the approval of the Council.

XIV.—The Printing of Reports

Such reports from commissions and statements from societies or theological seminaries as may be furnished to the Secretary seasonably in advance of the meeting may be printed at the discretion of the Executive Committee, and sent to the members elect, together with the program prepared. Not more than ten minutes shall be given to the presentation of any such report.

XV.—The Publication of Statistics

The Council will continue to make an annual compilation of statistics of the churches, and a list of such ministers as are reported by the several state organizations. The Secretary is directed to present at each stated meeting comprehensive and comparative summaries for the two years preceding.

XVI.—Fellowship with Other Bodies

The Council, as occasion may arise, will hold communication with the general Congregational bodies of other lands, and with the general ecclesiastical organizations of other churches of Christian faith in our own land, by delegates appointed by the Council or by the Executive Committee.

XVII.—Printed Ballots

Nominations for the Executive Committee of the Council, the Boards of Directors of the several societies and all elective officers shall be presented on printed ballots providing space for other nominations to be distributed to and cast by the members voting. A motion to instruct the casting of a single vote for any nominee shall be in order only upon the setting aside of this rule. Pending the declaration of the result of a ballot the order of the day may proceed.

XVIII.—Standing Rules

Standing rules may be adopted from time to time by a two-thirds' vote of the members present and voting at any meeting of the National Council.

STANDING RULES

1. Enrollment of Delegates. If more delegates are appointed by any constituent body than it is entitled to, they shall be enrolled in the order of presentation of their credentials up to the limit fixed by the constitution.

2. Fraternal Delegates. At each biennial meeting three fraternal delegates to the Congregational Union of England and Wales and one to each of the other national bodies of the Congregational churches, in addition to the Moderator ex officio, shall be appointed.

3. For purposes of nomination for positions on commissions and committees, and for other positions connected with the Council "ministers" shall be deemed to be those who have been ordained, and "laymen" those who have not been ordained.

4. The Travel Fund. Delegates from conferences and Associations which pay their full per capita for the support of the National Council and its mileage fund are entitled to share in the travel fund thus created. In any state which does not pay its entire per capita, participation in the fund shall be limited to delegates from Associations which have paid in full.

The mileage fund is distributed among all participating delegates on the basis of the number of miles traveled.

All persons regularly seated as delegates and serving for the major portion of the meeting of the Council shall be entitled to share in the mileage. (See b4-law XX.)

5. Time for Business. Ordinarily the forenoon sessions of the Council shall be reserved for the reports of commissions, discussion and action thereon and other necessary Council business, including a devotional period, and formal and inspirational addresses will be placed in the afternoon and evening sessions. (1923 Minutes, page 226.)

6. Commissions. In fields of executive activities where societies are at work, commissions of the National Council should not undertake executive responsibilities, but should rather make wholly independent studies and report recommendations and advice for the executives of the Council, of the Societies, of the State Conferences and of the churches.

Each commission shall ordinarily consist of active and corresponding members, one-fourth of the number being active members who shall reside within a short distance of some Congregational center that they may have several meetings without too great an expenditure of time and money. They shall present by mail to the corresponding members who reside in different parts of the country the main points at issue and shall take final action after the replies received have been considered. Each corresponding member shall be notified of the meetings of the commission and such corresponding members as attend may vote.

Commissions shall ordinarily consist of twenty-four members, six active and eighteen corresponding members.

No new commissions shall be appointed until the matter has been referred to the Executive Committee which shall report whether in its judgment the subject deserves special consideration, or should be handled by some existing society, committee or commission. The decision shall rest with the Council.

Each commission shall make a semi-annual report to the Executive Committee of the National Council and once each year the chairmen of the commissions shall be asked to join the Executive Committee in conference regarding the work of the commissions.

Commissions shall be appointed of persons having special contracts and first-hand information in the realms under review. The Social Relations Commission should consist mainly of employers, employees and special students of industrial and race problems; the International Commission of those born in foreign countries, or who have lived or traveled there extensively, or have made a special study of or had intimate relations with interests abroad; the Inter-church Commission of those who have been connected at some time with other denominations or have been associated with federated movements; the Commission on Recruiting should consist mainly of pastors in college towns, members of the faculties of theological schools, universities, colleges, academies and high schools, and possibly some students.

7. Ministerial Standing. (This action of the Council of 1915 not adopted as a standing rule, but referred to the Executive Committee for possible modification and later adoption.) The National Council recognizes ministerial standing as consisting of membership in a district association or state conference of Congregational churches based upon ordination. The loss of such membership for good and sufficient cause is the loss of ministerial standing, and a member who has been suspended from membership in a district association or state conference should not be permitted to exercise the functions of the ministry during the period of his suspension.

8. Ordination. The standard of the Congregational churches calls for full theological training as preparatory to ordination. In exceptional cases ordination may be properly conferred upon persons lacking theological training in the schools provided they have successfully completed three years of field study under the auspices of a state conference committee regularly appointed for that purpose, or in correspondence courses with theological seminaries of recognized standing. The Council urges upon the churches the avoidance of any tendency to ordain to the ministry persons who have not received adequate educational preparations or who do not intend to make the Christian ministry in its dignity and integrity their permanent life vocation.

The National Council recognizes the need of a specialized ministry in the modern church, therefore approves the tendency to ordain to the ministry qualified candidates who specialize in the work of religious education, and who should be recognized and honored as leaders in this developing phase of church work.
